KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Police on Wednesday identified the woman who fled after a routine traffic stop and died after an officer shot her and her car crashed on Interstate 35.

Carol Kerns, 37, was from the Kansas City suburb of Roeland Park, Kan. She died Tuesday afternoon.

Still unknown Wednesday was whether she died from the gunshot wound or the car accident. An autopsy was done Wednesday morning, although the results have not yet been released, police spokesman Sgt. Floyd Mitchell said.

Kerns had outstanding warrants, two for traffic violations in Kansas City and one for contempt of court in Lee's Summit, Mitchell said.

Mitchell said he could not release any information on a male passenger who was in the car with Kerns because he is a witness. The passenger got out of the car with his hands up before Kerns fled.

Police said a lone officer pulled Kerns over Tuesday about 4 p.m. on Southwest Trafficway, a major artery that feeds northbound Interstate 35. She gave the officer identification and he returned to his car to run a background check.

When the officer approached her again with questions about her identification, Kerns rolled up her window, locked her door and refused to get out of the car, police said.

Kerns bumped her car into the officer's legs, then stopped. The officer drew his gun and again told her to get out of the car, police said.

The passenger got out of the car, and then Kerns accelerated and drove her car toward the officer, who shot at her. She was struck by a bullet at the base of the rib cage on her left side, authorities said.

Kerns then sped onto northbound I-35 and crossed a grass median onto southbound I-35, where her car collided with a pickup truck.

Kerns was taken to a hospital, where she died shortly after 5 p.m. The driver of the southbound vehicle had no apparent injuries. The officer who shot at Kerns was not seriously injured.

Police would not say how many shots the officer fired at Kerns.

Atchison plans changes to jail after suicide attempts

ATCHISON, Kan. — Officials at the Atchison County Jail are planning several changes after the third hanging incident at the jail in less than two months.

An inmate from Holton attempted suicide Monday when he tried to hang himself with a shower curtain. The 35-year-old inmate was in stable condition Tuesday at the University of Kansas Medical Center.

He was in the same isolation cell where another inmate hanged himself on Dec. 8 and died a few days later. Another inmate recovered after trying to hang himself on Nov. 29 in a nearby cell.

Another inmate died after hanging himself in the jail in December 1997. In response, Sheriff John Calhoon said he's making several changes and considering others.

The department has purchased a restraining chair to prevent suicidal inmates from hurting themselves. Screening of inmates at booking will be revamped and some prisoners might be sent to other facilities.

Calhoon also might ask the Atchison County Commission for more jailers sooner than he had anticipated. The staff was to double from seven to 14 jailers when a new jail is expected to be completed in July 2000. With the money being spent on care of suicidal inmates possibly increasing, Calhoon said he'll consider adding more jailers now.

Calhoon said jail isn't supposed to be pleasant and anyone is likely to be depressed being locked up.

"It's not a place anyone wants to go to," Calhoon said. "When you have as many possible people come in with frowns or act mad, you can't put them all on a suicide watch. It's not feasible."

UMKC chancellor resigns after expansion controversy

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The chancellor of the University of Missouri-Kansas City will retire from her administrative duties to return to teaching, the university announced Wednesday.

Eleanor Brantley Schwartz will retire effective Feb. 1. She has been the university's chancellor since 1992.

Schwartz, 62, said in a news release that she had considered retiring a year ago but delayed her request because of "unresolved public issues involving UMKC."

The university has been embroiled in a controversy with nearby residents since an expansion plan was announced last spring. The plan had called for tearing down 50 houses for a parking lot and athletic fields. There were also plans for the eventual demolition of an additional 150 houses.

University leaders hope the plan would draw more students to live on-campus at what is now largely a commuter school. But nearby residents staged a public relations campaign against the plan, and it was postponed for a year.

Son invites police to bust parents for drug possession

PASCO, Wash. — A teen-ager upset about moving from rural New York to Washington got even with his parents by inviting police to check out a stash of marijuana in their bedroom.

Anthony Russo, a dentist, pleaded guilty to misdemeanor possession of marijuana Tuesday and was given a 90-day suspended sentence. Charges against his wife, Sheryl Russo, were dropped.

Police were tipped off by their 16-year-old son, who had moved with the family last year from a small farming community near Buffalo, N.Y., to Connell, a town of about 2,000 people in Washington.

The Russos had no comment.

Arkansas refinery explosion kills three oil employees

SMACKOVER, Ark. — An explosion rocked an oil refinery Wednesday, killing three people, a company spokesman said.

Bill Prewett, an attorney for Cross Oil Refinery, said the victims were employees of an outside contractor.

State Police Capt. Larry Gleghorn said the employees were working on a naphtha tank valve when the explosion occurred. Naphtha is a colorless, volatile petroleum distillate — usually an intermediate product between gasoline and benzene. It's used as a solvent.

Gleghorn said the local fire department and hazardous materials team were working to handle the naphtha leak.

State police, the local fire department, a hazardous-materials team and the county coroner were on the scene of the blast, which occurred about 10:30 a.m.

Smackover is about 110 miles south of Little Rock.

Impeachment trial begins today; Clinton does 'people's business'

By DAVID ESPO
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Bracing for opening arguments in his impeachment trial, President Clinton said Wednesday that he will tend studiously to the business of the people while his fate is settled in historic Senate proceedings.

Apart from Clinton's remarks his legal team dispatched a formal trial brief to the Senate arguing that neither fact nor law warranted his removal from office.

"They have their job to do in the Senate, and I have mine," the president said in his first public utterance in three weeks on an issue that has tarnished his presidency for posterity. "I trust that the right thing will be done."

Clinton stands accused of perjury and obstruction of justice.

The trial is to resume at 12 p.m., with Chief Justice William Rehnquist presiding and the House impeachment team — all Republican lawmakers — starting to present their case. The House does not yet have permission from the Senate to call witnesses in the trial.

Rep. James Sensenbrenner of Wisconsin, a House prosecutor, visited the Senate chamber during the day to prepare. He said his opening statement would focus on "laying out the case and showing very clearly that the president committed an impeachable offense."

Clinton's legal team argued otherwise in their legal brief filed with the Senate.

The allegations "do not begin to satisfy the stringent showing required by our Founding Fathers to remove a duly elected president from office, either as a matter of fact or law," they wrote. They "fall far short of what a prudent prosecutor would require before presenting a case to a judge or jury," the brief said.

House officials sent the Senate all public evidence in the case, including material from Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr and documents from the Paula Jones sexual harassment lawsuit. Also included are audio tapes that Linda Tripp made of her conversations with Monica Lewinsky.

Drafted by private attorneys and the staff of the White House counsel's office, Clinton's pleadings argued that the impeachment standard of high crimes and misdemeanors refers to actions that are attempts to subvert the Constitution. They said that just as Republicans and Democrats agreed in 1974 that President Nixon's filing of an allegedly false income tax return fell short of that standard, so did the allegations against Clinton, even if proven.

They also methodically sought to rebut each allegation — that Clinton lied in grand jury testimony, for example, or conspired to hide gifts that Lewinsky had given him.

They acknowledged that the accounts of Clinton and the former intern differ on some matters, however, the lawyers wrote, "these squabbles are utterly immaterial" and are "precisely the kind of disagreement that the law does not intend to capture as perjury."

Under ground rules adopted last week, the House has 24 hours — spread over three days, for example — to make its case, and the White House will have 24 hours for its defense. The Senate then will be permitted to pose questions to the two sides. Afterward, the White House is expected to seek dismissal of the charges, and the House is expected to seek permission to call witnesses.

If the prosecutors call even one witness, Clinton lawyers said they would need a delay of weeks to go through that process before they could cross examine any House witness fairly.

It will be up to the Senate to decide on requests for delays. The White House assertion that a lengthy pause in the trial would be needed appeared to be an effort to lay the groundwork for charging the GOP-controlled Senate with being unfair to the president.

Fraternity member falls from balcony

By JESSICA THOMAS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Delta Tau Delta member fell backwards over a balcony railing Dec. 11 at their fraternity house, 1001 Sunset Ave., resulting in a fractured skull and bleeding on his brain.

Cliff Lang, freshman in pre-professional business administration, was taken to Mercy Health Center on College Avenue and later transported by helicopter to Wesley Medical Center in Wichita.

Lang said he had consumed alcohol with a friend earlier in the day and briefly had attended a party at the Delt house, where he had nothing to drink. He then returned to his second-floor room to continue studying for finals.

Lang was sitting on a metal railing on the balcony outside his room at about 2:50 a.m. when he lost his balance and fell to the concrete.

Due to the head trauma, Lang says he is unable to remember the events directly before the fall clearly and has no memory of the following three days. After spending eight days in the hospital, Lang returned to his parents' home.

Delt President Adam Nigg said alcohol played a small part in the accident. He said Lang did consume alcohol at the Delt house, but in his own room and not at the sanctioned party.

"He didn't come down to the party as far as I know," Nigg said. "The party was over at midnight, and he fell somewhere around 2 a.m."

"It's just one of those incidents that can happen any night, and unfortunately, it did happen," he said.

Nigg said he had been questioned, but the party was within Interfraternity Council rules.

Greek Affairs adviser Barb Robel said the party was registered and the Social Responsibility Committee had visited the house that night.

All social events must be registered with the Greek Affairs office and observed by the committee, which is made up of members of Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic Council. Robel said the committee was set up as a peer-monitoring system to observe that events are compliant with risk-management rules.

Robel said she decided against conducting an investigation into Lang's accident after talking to Nigg.

"There was nothing to indicate that anything was out of order. All the rules set forth by risk management were in place," Robel said. "After visiting with the house president, we felt that it was just an isolated incident."

The Riley County Police Department still is investigating the case and would not release information about Lang's blood alcohol level; a spokesman said there is evidence that alcohol was a factor.

Robel said she didn't know the reason for the RCPD's continuing investigation.

Lang is recovering at his parents' home in Wichita and will be taking classes at Wichita State University for the spring semester. He said he plans to return to K-State next fall and continue to live at the Delt house.

Lang's mother, Vera Lang, said he still is feeling some effects from the fall.

"He had some bleeding on his brain that is not all absorbed yet, and he lost his sense of smell," she said. "That doesn't seem to be coming back."

We've done so much as your neighbor. We're ready to do so much more.

At Southwestern Bell, we consider it part of our business to be part of the places we serve. For decades, we've worked to provide the resources and support necessary to improve the quality of life for our neighborhoods, our communities and the state of Kansas.

Over the last seven years Southwestern Bell invested $202 million to improve Kansas's telecommunications infrastructure, so we could continue to provide our customers with the quality of service they deserve and have come to expect.

But that's only the beginning.

- Through our philanthropic arm, the Southwestern Bell Foundation, we have awarded more than $2 million in grants to Kansas organizations over the last three years.
- A part of these grants, $1.1 million, have been awarded as technology grants to 120 organizations, bringing unprecedented progress to Kansas' schools, libraries, hospitals, arts and other community-based organizations. Projects range from a school-based telemedicine preventive health program in Wyandotte County to the development of a videoconferencing system to aid economic development initiatives in Montgomery County.

Southwestern Bell has been a good neighbor to Kansas for over 115 years. We've established a pattern of making life better for folks around this state, and we have no intention of stopping now.

Just as we're using our technology and resources to make life better for Kansans across the state, we believe it's time for Kansans to get the full benefits of competition in both local and long-distance service.

And when Southwestern Bell is allowed to enter the long-distance marketplace, Kansans will benefit through:

- more choices of telecommunications service providers
- more choices of individual and bundled services
- better values for local and long-distance services
- the best quality of products and service
- new job opportunities as a result of growth from new telecommunication service options

It's time for the people of Kansas to get all the benefits of fair and open competition for telecommunications services. You're waiting. We're ready.

Wish list for '99 includes library, faculty salaries

With the dawning of a new semester, K-State and the Manhattan community should continue striving for the betterment of students and citizens alike. Here are some issues that should be at the forefront of policy-makers' minds.

■ Students need to see an end to the library-funding dilemma. The administration and Student Senate have made tremendous strides on the topic, and these efforts should not go to waste. There should be an even more aggressive approach to tackling the university's top priority.

■ The university and Kansas Legislature need to create competitive salaries for faculty members. Higher education is based on the abilities of instructors, and the only way to retain those instructors is by ensuring their compensation for their efforts.

■ As renovations inside the K-State Student Union enter a critical phase, officials should continue to do an excellent job keeping the process as painless as possible for students.

■ With a multitude of construction projects in the works for the campus, there should be a renewed look at careful campus planning. To continue campus beautification, there should continue to be a healthy mix of buildings and landscape.

■ The city and university should continue looking for solutions to pedestrian safety problems, as they did last semester when crosswalks on North Manhattan Avenue were made more visible.

■ Denison Hall should be demolished. The university has had permission to destroy this building for years. Negotiations with Mercy Health Center should be a priority, allowing Lafene Health Center to move and make room for the Department of English in Lafene's current home.

■ Students have a wonderful opportunity to support impressive and competitive men's and women's basketball teams that have realistic shots at clinching a berth in the NCAA Tournament.

K-State had a terrific 1998. With the dedication of the community, there's no doubt that 1999 can be at least as good.

Bipeds of system destroy flopping fish

Well, here I am. I'm the columnist, henceforth referred to as "the agent," and you are the benevolent reader, a.k.a. "sucker." This column should have some unifying theme, preferably some base theme to which most suckers can relate.

I, of course, am always in command. Even as you read this, I control what words you read. My words, heretofore to be referred to as my "agenda," should be slightly consistent, enough so that the sucker doesn't get lost or bored. This includes the agent making use of rank propaganda and lewd pictorials when necessary.

Then there is my editor(s), referred to now as "The (Wo)Man," who makes the agenda even more accessible to our sucker populace, collating various topics into the main vein — the Collegian, now to be known as "the system."

So, all in all, the system represents various agendas supervisory organized by The (Wo)Man, in which this agent participates, though this agent is only a little part of the whole system.

I work in the "opinion" section of the system, along with some other agents, who should be making me look good while at the same time supporting The (Wo)Man and the system's theme.

As an individual agent, The (Wo)Man doesn't tell me what the system's own agenda is, but each agent seems to be picked specially in order to, perhaps unconsciously, "not step on any toes," if you know what I mean, wink wink, nudge nudge. (I do not doubt there is some subliminal "pacification" going on in between the refresh rates here — have you seen "Contact"?)

At any rate, my agenda has been left untouched. I am no sucker, even if I am officially a fellow sucker, if you other suckers can escape your suckerness for a momentary lapse of sympathy, please.

Like some perverted platonic columnist, I've faith that we suckers hold within us some pure form of our suckerness, which we can access somehow and purify our "enhanced" understanding, a.k.a. misanthropy (whatever that means).

As I scribble down this column, it is soon to be sent off to The (Wo)Man, and there to be chastised for its place in the system. I have no doubt they will crease certain phrases of mine, punctuate my punctuation into pestilence. This much I do know — whatever happens, you must not believe them. I've explained them away already. There's nothing more behind their big fool heads than gross blunders and slow bludgeoning. Take them for who they are — but don't fight, because they will win, they will survive you to be sure as this earth will survive them. So buck up, and take it like you know it's coming ... just embrace the pain.

Now, as much as I've explained to you, and as much as I know that you know that they have changed my column up, enough to make me look just a little bit crazy, know that there is a slim chance that they won't change a thing.

Understand this, for this is their most devious defense. They know the truth (they "are" the truth), so when they let the fish out of the bag, only to flop and flip, on dry land, in a world "they" created, it fits their purposes perfectly. The fish dies, an ancient ancestor borne from these very visions bleeding before its bulbous bifocals. Nothing knows everything like the scared sacred-scale-species. I interject, dejected. They have broken my backbone before, I lisp listlessly, longing again to listen and lead.

It sounds insane, doesn't it? I swear, they made me say this. I cringe in defeat to their dutiful tactics (see what I whimsically mean?). Is there no escape? Where is a fish to go among the bipedal? What other option but to breathe the air and grow legs. Perhaps they have made me look like a lunatic, or perhaps they have let the fish live, yet muted and alone. The message, I'm sure, is clear: I find I'm a fish in fact far-fetched, taken as an agent in their aquatic-affirmative-action escapade. Believe what you will, but beyond that, let the buyer beware.

Football academic rankings don't match athletic success

K-State leads list of low graduation rates

By DERRICK Z. JACKSON
THE BOSTON GLOBE

When the Associated Press named Bill Snyder the 1998 college football coach of the year, he said he was happy to be at a university with "people who cared, who were more than willing to help and who wanted to provide us with the support necessary." He said, "I appreciated the sincerity of those people, and how important it was to them that Kansas State football move in a different direction."

Caring, support and sincerity at K-State seems to apply only to what happens on the football field. On the field, K-State rose briefly to a No. 1 ranking before finishing as the AP's fourth-ranked team in the regular season. Off the field, K-State was No. 1 in a far more dubious category. K-State graduates only 7 percent of African-American players in annual statistics kept by the NCAA. It was the worst rate among the 46 teams that are either among the AP's Top 25 college teams or that played in this season's bowl games.

Tennessee finished the regular season as No. 1 on the field. Coach Phillip Fulmer was second to Snyder for coach-of-the-year honors. "It's really been fulfilling from a program standpoint and a personal standpoint," Fulmer said.

There would be a lot of empty conversation if Fulmer talked about his program from a graduation standpoint. Of the 46 teams, Tennessee has the fourth-lowest graduation rate for African-American players. It graduated only 15 percent.

The Football News coach of the year was Houston Nutt of Arkansas. He guided the 11th-ranked Razorbacks from mediocrity to a bowl berth in just his first season at the helm. He said the season "has been a dream come true for us."

Off the field, Arkansas is a nightmare. Its 11-percent graduation rate for African-American football players is second only to K-State.

Welcome to my third-annual Graduation Gap Bowl, the bowl where winning often comes with an abominable mockery of the phrase "student-athlete." The 1998 NCAA Division I report is based on the percentage of athletes who entered school between the 1988-89 year and the 1991-92 year and graduated within six years.

This year's most embarrassing "winners" are Tennessee, Ohio State, K-State, Florida, Texas A&M and Arkansas. They comprised six of the top 11 teams in the AP rankings. They were also six of the worst 11 teams in graduating African-American players.

The plantation status of Tennessee, Ohio State, K-State and Florida is cemented by the fact that they have either shown no improvement in their graduation rates or suffered declines. Tennessee graduated 27 percent of African-American players in the 1996 and 1997 reports before falling to its current 15 percent.

Ohio State graduated 29 percent in the '96 and '97 reports before slipping to 27 percent. K-State was at 7 percent in all three reports. Florida graduated 31 percent of African-American athletes in the '96 and '97 reports before falling to 28 percent.

The Graduation Gap Bowl applauds colleges that win and graduate players. But the applause is brief. Of the AP's top 12 teams, only four, Florida State, UCLA, Wisconsin and Tulane, had team or African-American graduation rates equal to or above the average for Division I. The graduation rates in Division I are 52 percent for the entire team, 43 percent for African-American players and 61 percent for white players.

The five highest graduation rates belong to 17th-ranked Notre Dame (80 percent team, 79 percent African-American), 13th-ranked Virginia (74 and 78), 22nd-ranked Penn State (74 and 76), 10th-ranked Tulane (74 and 71) and 14th-ranked Nebraska (66 and 64). Florida State, Tulane, Nebraska, Air Force, Oregon, Miami and Mississippi State were schools that graduated at least 50 percent of African-American players and had team averages equal to or above that of the general student body.

That said, the exploitation at the top outweighs any exclamations. Twenty-one of the 46 teams had African-American graduation rates of 38 percent and less. Tennessee's team graduation rate of 27 percent is only half that of the general student body. The 20 percent graduation rate for African-American players at eighth-ranked Texas A&M is less than half of the 44 percent graduation rate for regular African-American students.

K-State's African-American player graduation rate befits a school that graduates only 14 percent of its regular African-American students. When K-State lost the game that cost it a chance to be No. 1, Snyder said, "The greater the investment, the greater the pain." In the classroom, the pain is great at K-State because there is no investment at all.

Reprinted with permission from the Boston Globe.

Editor's Note: Overall, K-State students who entered school between the 1988-89 year and the 1991-92 year graduated in six or fewer years at a rate of 46.7 percent according to the Office of Planning and Analysis.

Students should seize opportunity to learn

With January comes another semester at K-State. Fortunes in tuition have been paid; another small fortune will filter its way into the bookstore coffers. Classrooms will be filled, professors will begin their pontification, and the whole process of schooling will have begun again.

The question is — after four years at this university, thousands spent on tuition, and with that degree in hand, can you honestly say that you've been educated?

In theory, a university education should teach you how to learn; technical skills are the realm of the community college. The reality, more often than not, is that your expensive education has taught you to memorize. Skill at last-minute cramming, crash writing just ahead of the deadline and sucking up to your graduate assistants are all that is needed to get your degree.

A year after it's all over, how much do you really remember from that Shakespearean literature course? Does the firm that eventually hires you really care that you can summarize the influence of the Hapsburgs on Austrian foreign policy in 10 pages or less? None of the important questions of life come on the final exam.

The United States has a well-schooled populace. Twelve years of public education for most, and an additional four years of post-secondary education for many. But if polls and voting patterns are to be believed, few people in this country have been taught to think.

We enter adulthood with an assortment of unquestioned opinions ingrained in us from the news media, our parents, our teachers, our religious leaders and our peers. These prejudices of our upbringing in turn guide our votes and our advocacy. We clamor for simple solutions to complex problems, and when they fail miserably, as they are wont to do, we have learned nothing.

We are taught love of country, and so all our wars are good wars. We are taught respect for authority, and so all our politicians are noble men and women with only the voters' interests at heart. We are presented with morality as a set of fables, and thus see the world in black and white. They are rare people who enter a university already blessed with the mental tools to judge each situation critically and form their own rational opinions. It should be the rare person who leaves the university still committed to the simplistic notions of adolescence. The tragedy is that so many do glide through universities with their opinions unchallenged.

It is not from classes that a student learns the skills of thinking, but rather from the richness of the university environment. It is the diversity of people, the wealth of differing opinions, and the breadth of knowledge available in our library that temper our prejudices and broaden our horizons. At no other time in your life will so much opportunity for learning be at hand.

With January comes another semester. Isn't it time you got an education?

Rec Report

Recreational Services' Offices Located in Peters Recreation Complex

Aerobics and Exercise Program

Improving fitness is only a hop, skip and a jump away with Recreational Services' Wildcat Workout program. "There's no better time than the start of the new year to check out aerobic exercise classes," said Robin Leaper, Assistant Director/Aquatics and Building Operations. No two Wildcat Workout sessions are quite the same. A variety of fitness classes are offered at various times each day of the week. Also, different exercise leaders teach the classes and add an individual flare to each session.

Some Rec users enjoy the high energy of aerobics. For these individuals, an aerobics class offers a high- and low-impact workout with intense, energetic choreography. Toning is more for those wanting an overall body toning workout through resistance training. This workout involves all of the major muscle groups. As a combination of the two, an aerobics/toning class is also offered. This one-hour class combines 30 minutes of aerobic activity and 30 minutes of toning. Another alternative to the straight aerobics class is the interval workout, which alternates high and low intensity in an aerobic workout.

If a person prefers some fancy footwork for a workout, a step class offers a challenge of stepping using 6-inch, 8-inch or 10-inch risers.

Once again, a combo class of stepping and toning offers a great workout. The class lasts 1-1/2 hours, splitting time between 45 minutes of stepping and 45 minutes of resistance exercises. And if the regular step workout is not tough enough, a step challenge session offers fast-paced step choreography. However, prior step workout experience is recommended before trying this class.

For those people who like to mix up their workout with a little variety, they choose the combo workout which offers a mix of aerobics, step aerobics and toning. They also turn to the circuit workout to get a strength and endurance workout with alternating sets of aerobics, step aerobics and strength training.

"Aerobic exercise gives you the chance to look and feel better, tone up and improve your overall health. Wildcat Workouts offer classes that appeal to a variety of interests and fitness levels," Leaper said.

3 NEW Exercise Programs

Jump Start

Exercises are performed standing and/or sitting. Flexibility, muscular strength, muscular endurance and coordination are the areas emphasized. Towels, rubber bands and hand weights are used in the exercise routine. This program is especially designed for individuals who should not participate in more rigorous exercise classes due to low fitness level, knee pain, back pain, multiple sclerosis, Parkinson's disease, peripheral neuropathy, polio, stroke, or other neurological disorders. Sessions offered Tuesday & Thursday from 8:00-8:45 a.m. beginning today.

Abs/Back Workout

This program is designed to assist those with back pain by teaching progressive exercises that strengthen the back. Focus is on preventive and rehabilitative techniques with proper body mechanics for work and home. Flexible enough to accommodate the individual's needs, the Abs/Back Workout includes:

- individual, one-on-one instruction and group instruction
- information on body mechanics for activities of daily living
- progressive relaxation skill instruction
- neck exercise instruction

Session offered every Wednesday from 6:30-7:15 p.m.

Cardio Plus

This multi-training exercise class involves kick boxing, weights and step aerobics and is recommended for those of intermediate or advanced ability. Sessions are offered Tuesday evenings at 8:30 p.m.

10% Discount

Purchase or renew your facility use passes for Spring Semester before January 31 and receive a 10% discount off the regular monthly rates!

Pool Action

Splash into the new year at the Natatorium. If your new year resolution includes some type of exercise program, then join us at the pools for a very enjoyable, non-impact workout. You can lap swim in the 8-lane, play water basketball or participate in water aerobics in the 6-lane, or deep water log and dive in the diving well. Our water aerobic schedule is available at the Natatorium, Recreation Complex, Rec Services' Home Page (www.recservices.ksu.edu) or by calling Rec Check at 532-6000.

Aqua Aerobics

Mon & Wed at 11:30 a.m.

Mon, Tues & Thurs at 7:30 p.m.

Deep Water Jogging

Wed at 7:30 p.m.

Fitness Facts

Winter is once again upon us. And, with the falling temperatures comes falling snow. Shoveling snow is good aerobic exercise and can be a positive experience if done correctly. But remember that shoveling snow is taxing on both the musculoskeletal and cardiopulmonary systems and those who are not physically fit should probably not shovel snow at all, according to some experts. Even if you are in good shape, there are still some basic guidelines you should follow:

- Briefly warming up for 10 minutes before shoveling.
- Keeping the shovel close to the body and not extending arms with a full shovel of snow.
- Bending at the knees when lifting the snow.
- Scooping small amounts of snow and walking it to where you want to dump it rather than tossing it aside or over your shoulder.
- Resting frequently and drinking plenty of non-alcoholic liquids before and after the job.

Rec Check
Rec Check provides program and facility information 24 hours a day by dialing 532-6000. Call Rec Check for Recreation Complex and Pool hours, exercise sessions, intramural deadlines and more!

Entry Policies:

- Facility users must be affiliated with KSU - student, faculty/staff or alumni association member.
- Cards are not sold to the general public.
- Call the Recreational Services office at 532-6980 for details.

Nutrition Notes

It is the start of another new year! Getting and staying healthy may not be as difficult as you think. Succeeding at healthy eating can be as easy as starting with these three things:

1. Choose a variety of foods to meet all your nutritional needs.
2. Use moderation as a guide when choosing what and how much you eat.
3. Change habits gradually for long-term adherence.

Basketball Officials Wanted!!!

Recreational Services will be hiring and training Basketball Officials for the upcoming season. Training sessions will be held January 25-27 at 5:00 p.m. each night at the Recreation Complex. Attendance is required at all three sessions. You do not have to be experienced in basketball officiating. We will train and prepare you to be the best official you can be. Come on out and give it a shot!

Free Blood Pressure Checks

Blood pressure checks can be requested in the Wellness Resource Center any time a Rec Services' fitness consultant is available.

Working It Out

Start your new year with Wildcat Workouts! There's a new schedule of exercise sessions beginning today with a great staff to motivate and encourage you. Bring a friend and make exercise a part of your routine. There are a variety of exercise sessions available to everyone! All fitness classes are offered at varying times throughout the week.

Wellness Resource Center

Fitness consultants offer many helpful services this semester at the Wellness Resource Center in the Recreation Complex. These services include measurement and evaluation of flexibility, strength, cardiovascular endurance and percent body fat. Fitness consultants are available by appointment to assist you in developing a personalized exercise program. Let the Wellness Resource Center be your door to safe, enjoyable and effective exercise.

Intramural Basketball

Don't miss our largest intramural sport of the year! Start organizing your teams now for the upcoming Basketball season! Entries will be accepted Thursday, January 14, through Thursday, January 21. Priority on playing times is on a first-come, first-serve basis. Information sheets with league menus are available in the Recreational Services office. Be a part of the action!

Charles Riley has been working for Recreational Services as Assistant Building Supervisor since June 1998. He began working evening shifts initially, but now is most frequently seen at the service area in the mornings. A native of Kansas City, KS, Riley said he enjoys working at the Rec Complex because he has learned so much about physical fitness, first aid, workout programs, and -- most of all -- working with people. Riley will graduate at the end of this semester with a degree in Criminology and looks forward to beginning his career in the Air Force working security. Riley's advice to new students: Set goals early on & stick with them, develop a structured routine, and limit your course load to 12 hours while adjusting to the university setting.

Matt Banker, senior in food science, began working at the Rec Complex fall semester of 1996 and now oversees activities at the service area as Building Supervisor. He enjoys the high student activity level of the evening shift and also working with a large number of faculty/staff and the retired participants more common in the morning hours. Banker's claim to fame at the Rec was being featured in a video film a few years ago which promoted using K-State's wildcat card. "Being part of the Rec staff keeps me involved with staying fit and has helped me get to know lots of other people," Banker said, adding that he really enjoys the recreation environment.

Michael Jordan retires, putting end to historic career in NBA

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan thought about reducing the whole thing to just two words. "I'm gone."

That would have worked. Instead, he almost cried and almost sounded content in pronouncing himself retired from the Chicago Bulls and basketball, leaving himself the tiniest of outs.

"Mentally, I'm exhausted. I don't feel I have a challenge. Physically, I feel great," the 35-year-old Jordan told a packed news conference at the United Center, where he worked much of his magic. "This is a perfect time for me to walk away from the game."

In doing so, for the second time in five years, the NBA's greatest player ended his 13-year career with six championships, five MVP awards, 10 scoring titles and unsurpassed worldwide fame.

Is it forever this time? "I never say never, but it's 95, 99.9 percent never. I'm very secure in my decision," Jordan said.

Pressed on the tiny window he left open, Jordan said: "I'm ninety-nine point nine as you read it. It's not really 100 percent, but it's close. So that's where I stand. I'm not going to say 'never, never.' I'll say 99.9. Take it for what it's worth."

Pressed again on why he wouldn't say 100 percent, Jordan said, "Because it's my 1 percent and not yours."

Accompanied by his wife, Juanita, Jordan looked dapper as always, wearing a dark blue suit, shimmering gold tie and gold earring dangling from his left lobe. The only thing that looked out of place was the bandage wrapped around his right index finger.

Jordan said he severed a tendon while cutting a cigar, an injury that needs surgery and would have sidelined him for the first two months of the season had he not retired.

The injury had no bearing on his decision, which he said he made several months ago but waited to announce until the lockout ended.

Jordan alluded to his first retirement in 1993, when he briefly pursued a professional baseball career before returning late in the 1994-95 season.

"Well, we do this again for the second time," he said to open the news conference.

A few sentences later he added, "There won't be another announcement to baseball or anything to that nature."

Jordan, who has three children, said he looked forward to being a parent and would "live vicariously through my kids," whether or not they played basketball.

"My life will take a change," said Jordan, adding that he also will tend to his many business interests. He makes an estimated $45 million a year from endorsements.

Added his wife: "I see Michael doing a lot more carpooling."

He prefaced his retirement remarks with words of condolence for the family of a Chicago police officer who was killed in the line of duty. He then went on to thank commissioner David Stern and Bulls owner Jerry Reinsdorf — both of whom were present — for the chance to play a game he so loved.

"I thought about saying two words — 'I'm gone' — but I owe the fans and the media more than that," he said.

"It's tough. I'm doing a good job of trying to hold back the emotions because it's like taking away something that I truly have loved," he said.

Huskers take revenge

K-State overpowered in embarrassing road loss

By FRANK FLATON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LINCOLN, Neb. — In a Big 12 Conference match up that featured two schools known for their heralded football teams, the Nebraska Cornhuskers struck revenge against the Wildcat faithful by capitalizing on poor K-State shooting to beat the Cats, 70-61, Wednesday night.

K-State lost its third of four conference games to move to 12-5 on the season as the Cornhuskers grabbed their first Big 12 win to start the year with a 9-7 record.

With the Cats shooting a dismal 35 percent from the floor and committing a variety of errors that included 17 turnovers and four traveling penalties, head coach Tom Asbury said the effort was the worst game K-State has played all year.

"We were horrible," Asbury said. "We knew exactly what we needed to do but didn't do it."

The Huskers, who shot 45 percent from the floor and grabbed 10 steals from the Wildcats, were paced by senior center Venson Hamilton and junior guard Cookie Belcher. Hamilton compiled 17 points and 12 rebounds while Belcher poured in 15 points, including three three-pointers.

Leading the way for the Cats was Manny Dies, who had his first double-double since the season opener by pouring in 19 points, including a career high 11 free throws, and pulling down 12 rebounds.

"Manny played well," Asbury said. "He was OK. He was pretty solid, actually."

With Dies as one of only two Wildcats scoring in double figures, Asbury said K-State suffered from poor guard play and lackluster rebounding.

"You don't have to be a rocket scientist to figure out that our guard play wasn't that great," he said. "We are supposed to be one of the best rebounding teams in the country, but we weren't displaying it."

"We can't come to play every other game. We just can't miss five easy layups and not box out," he said.

In addition to poor rebounding and missed opportunities, senior guard Chris Griffin said confidence was a factor in the loss.

"It was just lack of confidence," he said. "We didn't rebound the ball well. We didn't do things we were capable of."

The first half started off dead even as Hamilton tossed in a jumper to notch the game at 12-all with just under 12 minutes to go. After both teams switched baskets for six minutes, the Cats tied it up at 21 with a Josh Kimm three-pointer.

Nebraska senior forward Andy Markowski quieted the Wildcat arsenal by tossing in three field goals down the stretch to put the Huskers up by 10 at the break.

The Wildcats came out of the locker room after halftime with a powerful start. Senior forward Shawn Rhodes scored nine points in the first five minutes, and K-State pulled within two with just under 16 minutes to play.

That was as close as the Cats would get to victory: Nebraska pulled away for good with 12 minutes to go, leading by as many as 12.

Rhodes said one problem for K-State was the lack of somebody stepping up and playing hard.

"We need somebody to step up and have some guts," he said. "We just got to get a lot tougher. People need to toughen up. We didn't attack and we weren't penetrating."

The Wildcats travel to Austin, Texas, Saturday to take on the Texas Longhorns at 12:45 p.m.

Wildcats replace departing coaches with talent from other schools

By RICHARD SMITH
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Stability is not one of the perks of coaching college football.

The K-State assistant-coaching carousel set in motion by the December departures of assistants Mike Stoops and Brent Venables continued to spin along at dizzying speeds in the wake of the Cats' Builders Square Alamo Bowl loss to Purdue. When the dust settled, assistants Mark Mangino and Jon Fabris had left, leaving head coach Bill Snyder several vacancies to fill for next season.

Fabris left K-State to take a position under new head coach Lou Holtz at the University of South Carolina. As the defensive ends coach in Manhattan for the past two years, Fabris was the man responsible for tutoring such defensive standouts as Darren Howard and Joe Bob Clements.

Fabris was also in charge of K-State's special teams unit, which led the nation in punt returns this year behind the strong play of All-America return man David Allen.

Because of his many responsibilities to the team, Mangino's departure is perhaps the most damaging to the Cats. Mangino served under Snyder for the past eight years. He is the third K-State assistant to join the staff of former Wildcat assistant Bob Stoops at the University of Oklahoma.

Max Urlick, director of athletics, said the shuffling of the coaching staff would not adversely affect ongoing recruiting efforts for next season.

"While [recruiting] is initiated perhaps through a networking of assistant coaches, I think most young men and women are sold on the ability and performance of the head coach," Urlick said. "I think any impact it might have here would be minimal."

While no timetable has been set for naming Mangino's replacement, Snyder made the first step in restocking his coaching staff on Jan. 4 by naming Rex Ryan, Phil Bennett and Jim Gush to his defensive coaching staff.

"What I greatly appreciate about each of them are the intrinsic values they bring to the young people we have in our program," Snyder said. "Each has a genuine concern and affection for their players, great integrity, a sincere sense of loyalty to the programs they have been a part of, and an intense dedication to their profession."

Urlick said he was pleased with the coaching selections as well.

"Their ability to teach and to communicate, and the enthusiasm they were able to display to me got me very excited about their desire to be at K-State and part of an already successful football program," he said.

Ryan will be taking over as defensive coordinator and linebackers coach next season after spending last season in the same positions at Oklahoma under former coach John Blake.

Ryan has made his name by crafting aggressive, blitzing defenses both at the pro level with the Arizona Cardinals and at the collegiate level with Cincinnati and Morehead State prior to his arrival in Norman, Okla.

His Morehead State squads led the nation in sacks twice during his four-year tenure, and Cincinnati finished 13th nationally in defense in Ryan's year as coordinator there.

Last year, his Sooners defensive unit was one of the stingiest in the nation, finishing sixth in total defense.

Despite Oklahoma's losing record, its 279 yards allowed per game was good enough to land them second only to the Cats in the Big 12.

Joining Ryan in the move from Norman was Bennett, former Sooners secondary coach, who spent last year at Oklahoma following stints as a defensive coordinator at five other schools.

Bennett will be charged with shoring up a K-State pass defense that proved vulnerable at times down the stretch this season, giving up 11 touchdown passes in the season's final four games, compared to only seven scoring passes in the first nine.

Rounding out the additions to the defensive staff is Gush, a former Garden City Community College head coach. Gush replaces Fabris as defensive ends coach after a highly successful stint in Garden City, Kan. Gush led the Broncbusters to a 29-7 record, finishing seventh, fourth and seventh in the nation in his three years as head coach.

Prior to his coaching job at Garden City he served as the Broncbuster defensive coordinator for 10 years. During Gush's tenure, the Broncbuster defense produced at least one first-team All-America selection for 12 consecutive years.

"I am very pleased with the three coaches we were able to bring into our program," Snyder said. "The past experiences and successes of these coaches speak for themselves."

"They are excited about the opportunity to be here and we are excited about having them."

New year looks bright for Wildcats despite departures of key coaches, players come out tomorrow — bet your bottom dollar that tomorrow, there'll be sun. Just thinkin' about tomorrow clears away the cobwebs and the sorrows 'till there's none. Tomorrow!

Tomorrow! I love ya, tomorrow! You're only a day away!"

Now that I feel better, let's start talking about K-State football. To give a little bit of a recap of the Alamo Bowl, as painful as it is to do so, I must say that I will never forget walking out of the Alamodome to a barrage of Purdue followers mocking us Wildcats. I walked by an elderly lady who stuck her finger in my face and uttered two simple, yet devastating words, "K-who?" This example of a sore winner will stay with me for the duration of my life. I hope I never witness K-State enthusiasts acting in that manner.

Instead of dwelling on the Wildcats' finest as well as most disappointing season in history, let's focus on the future. There will be sun next year, oh yes there will be, and it is going to be pretty radiant too. Coaching and the defense will be addressed this week, with the offense and special teams set to appear in my column next week.

There is no denying that the Cats will begin next season without many of the key ingredients that made this season so bitter as well as sweet. Let's start at the top — or I guess close to the top would be more appropriate. Three of the biggest reasons why K-State had one of the country's finest defenses are already gone. Those gentlemen are defensive coordinator

Mike Stoops, defensive run game coordinator Brent Venables and defensive ends coach Jon Fabris.

However, Bill Snyder has replaced the departed assistants with what looks to be a fine batch of new coaches. Rex Ryan (yes, that's former Philadelphia Eagles coach Buddy Ryan's son) will be the defensive coordinator. Phil Bennett will coach the secondary and Jim Gush will tackle the defensive ends.

Stoops, Venables and Fabris will be missed, but the bottom line is that K-State has brought in a trio of experienced and proven coaches to lead the Wildcat defense into the millennium.

While we're on the subject of defense, let's talk about the players the Cats will have for next year. Everyone seems to be anticipating a huge drop-off, but I see no reason why the Wildcats won't have another dominating defense next year.

Linebackers Jeff Kelly and Travis Ochs, defensive tackle Andrae Rowe, defensive end Joe Bob Clements and cornerback Gerald Neasman have all played their final game for K-State and all will be difficult to replace.

However, the Wildcats had a wealth of potential backing up those players this past season. I don't know if anyone else noticed, but freshman

K-State's women's basketball team battled a nationally-ranked, Big 12 Conference opponent and came out on top Wednesday night, beating Nebraska, 79-67.

Fighting through a variety of defenses ranging from the full-court press in the first half to a second-half zone, the Cats earned their second conference win this season.

Kristen Rethman's first half three-point shooting helped K-State jump out to an early 8-2 lead.

Nebraska coach Paul Sanderford said Rethman's early shooting set the tone for an up-and-down game.

"When the freshman hits that three pointer — that was about a 45 footer — you kind of knew it was going to be a battle," Sanderford said.

But Nebraska, led by forward Nicole Kubik, would close the early deficit.

Entering the game, the Cats were prepared for pressure after what players and coaches described as an end-of-the-game letdown Saturday against Texas Tech.

"When you prepare for Nebraska, you know it's coming," head coach Deb Patterson said.

Patterson said she was pleased with her team's ability to play within themselves and to handle the full-court press.

"Players were willing to step up and do their job and not do more than that," Patterson said. "If you open the floor and have players spaced properly, if you've got players willing to make plays with the ball, you've got a chance."

The Wednesday victory moved the Cats to 9-5 on the season and 2-2 in the Big 12. Nebraska, ranked 24th nationally, fell to 13-4 and 2-2 in the conference.

The Huskers pressed relentlessly throughout the first half, forcing the Cats to battle and scrap for every point. Despite committing 12 turnovers, the Cats led Nebraska 38-33 entering half-time, with Rethman contributing 12 of the team's points.

In the second half, the momentum of the game changed. In what he called an attempt to buy some time, Sanderford dropped his team into a zone defense as the half began.

Nebraska's Brooke Schwartz gave the Cornhuskers the lead with a three-point shot with 15:53 left in the game.

But with 13:45 left to play and the two teams tied, Nebraska went into a shooting drought. The drought lasted 7 minutes as the Cats built a 15 point lead, proving too much for the Huskers to overcome.

The women's team continues its home stretch Saturday night against Texas at Bramlage Coliseum.

Nebraska senior guard Monet Williams looks to pass the ball under pressure from Wildcat freshman Essence Perry (left) and sophomore Kim Woodlee (back). The Wildcats beat the 24th-ranked Huskers 79-67 Wednesday night in Bramlage Coliseum, and take on Texas Saturday night.

SGA executives should meet campaign goals by end of term

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Body President Tracey Mann and Vice President Andy Macklin entered their offices last spring with three main goals. They go into the last stretch of their term with those goals already accomplished and a little time to concentrate on other areas.

"As far as our three campaign issues that we promised, two of those are finished and one of those is almost finished," Macklin said. "It's like finishing studying for a test a week in advance."

The two issues Mann and Macklin have already accomplished are a Chester E. Peters Recreation parking permit and a book swap program.

The Rec Complex parking permit allows off-campus students to pay $30 annually to park at the Rec Complex for two hours. The earliest the permits will be available is June.

The book swap program, created by Bob Fox, senior in information systems, allows students to trade and buy books over the Internet. Mann and Macklin proposed this idea during their campaign and have been working with Fox to implement it.

Fox will turn the World Wide Web site over to the Student Governing Association when he graduates in May. Mann and Macklin said they plan to create a position that will oversee the program.

"I never had some kind of grand scheme for it, but I'm glad the SGA is sponsoring it so I won't have to continue it after I graduate," Fox said.

Fox said the program has been pretty successful. More than 100 books have been posted on the site.

In the future there will be a counter on the Web page that will show how many students have used it, he said. There aren't yet a lot of statistics comparing how many students are using the online book swap instead of buying from the bookstores, but Fox said he hopes to have some better numbers in the future.

"As more people become computer savvy, it will get more traffic," he said.

The third issue still in the final stages is improving advising. The advising resolution passed unanimously in Senate last fall, and Mann and Macklin are working with Provost Jim Coffman to address the remaining issues.

Mann said it was relaxing to know what they've accomplished.

"When I was driving back up here, I was thinking it was nice to turn back and know that all the things we promised last year have pretty much been taken care of already," Mann said.

Besides accomplishing the campaign issues Mann and Macklin ran on last spring, they also implemented the Course Information Program for the first time last semester. The CIP will provide information to students and faculty about courses and teaching methods of professors. Macklin said this semester they are going to compile the results from last semester's surveys and post them on the Internet.

Mann and Macklin also started a Multicultural Student Organization Roundtable, with representatives from the multicultural organizations on campus, to open up discussion about multiculturalism at K-State.

Mann said the Roundtable didn't go that well, but it was a starting point to build on for the spring semester and in the future.

This semester Mann said he also will be talking to legislators about funding for Hale Library and increasing faculty salaries.

Since Mann and Macklin have accomplished many of their goals, they said it gives them time to work on some extra things this semester.

One of those things is speaking to organizations about SGA, the importance of voting and getting involved, getting educated on issues and speaking up when students have questions or concerns.

"We'd especially like to get that done before elections kick-off," Macklin said.

Mann said he and Macklin need to keep working hard and finish their term strong.

"We're just going to try and finish as strong as we can."

Administrators work to improve K-State's faculty advising process

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An advising resolution stating the guidelines for advisers and advisees unanimously passed by Student Senate last semester is just the beginning of an enhanced advising program at K-State.

A week after the Senate passed the resolution, the Kansas Board of Regents spent a large part of its meeting discussing academic advising for all regents schools. Student body presidents and administrations from each school gave a report about the shortcomings of advising at their schools and what they were doing to improve advising.

The focus on academic advising at the regents meeting was partly a result of K-State's Student Body President Tracey Mann and Vice President Andy Macklin making it a priority for K-State.

"I would say that of all the services K-State offers the students, I think the students are most disappointed with academic advising," Mann said.

Both Mann and Macklin said they want to accomplish three things with advising at K-State: recognize and award good advisers, regularly assess academic advisers, and set up a task force of faculty, administration and students to look at how K-State can improve advising.

"As a result of the Board of Regents meeting and the report that Provost (Jim) Coffman and I gave, all three of those things are going to happen," Mann said.

Coffman said K-State has been taking significant steps to enhance the quality of advising for the last year and a half. K-State enhanced the staff of the undecided major, now known as open-option, and created an interactive Web site for majors, available through a link at www.ksu.edu. Each of the colleges has been working on a more precise advising plan.

"It is important to all of us that students are successful here," Coffman said. "Advising is critical to that, and the truth is that K-State needs to improve its advising."

Coffman said he hopes to create an effective feedback system. The feedback system wouldn't be about evaluating individual advisers but about evaluating department-level advising. Coffman said, in order to "see where we have problems so we can work with the units to see where we can get those problems solved."

Coffman said he also wants to work on expanding students' awareness and knowledge of advising.

"Some students don't take advantage of what is available to them, or they don't follow advice," he said. "It's a two-way street."

One of Mann and Macklin's goals is to have an award to recognize good advisers. Coffman said K-State is going to establish a university-wide Adviser of the Year award. Privately funded, it would amount to $2000 and be in conjunction with the Outstanding Teacher Award series.

The adviser will be selected through nominations from college departments and an advising committee.

SHOOTING

With a shotgun barrel against his head at the time, Thomas said he couldn't see everything that took place.

Steven Waters, 28, Junction City — one of the alleged intruders — ran out of the room. He might or might not have been armed. Waters was later found with gunshot wounds to the chest and died at Mercy Health Center on College Avenue.

Tyler Greule, 25, also of Junction City, had been holding the handgun on Fox. He ran into the kitchen, and Thomas said he took the shotgun from Eric D. Wilson, 28, Junction City, who had been holding it to him.

Greule was treated and released for a gunshot wound to his left foot.

Greule was brought back to the living room and he and Wilson were unmasked. Dossett called 911, and Jones made a second call to tell the police his gun's registration number, Thomas said.

Police would not confirm that Jones fired on the intruders, though he had brought the handgun into the room. Thomas said he didn't see who fired the shots.

Thomas said he knew of no motive for the break-in. He said he was acquainted with Greule but never heard an explanation from him during the encounter.

"Our impression was they were at the wrong place," Thomas said.

For now, Thomas said he hopes Jones' actions are seen in the proper context and not just as a black man with a gun. "That's my biggest concern is the slant, and Richard did what he had to do," Thomas said.

Under Kansas law, deadly force is justified against a threat to one's life, but not to protect property.

Jones and Fox declined comment. Greule and Wilson were arrested and charged with aggravated burglary, aggravated assault and criminal possession of firearms, and each has bail set at $100,000. Both men are also scheduled to appear in Division II court at 2:30 p.m. Tuesday for conspiracy to commit burglary.

County Attorney Bill Kennedy said the court appearance is typically one where defendants can schedule preliminary examinations before entering a plea.

Johnson resigns as Dolphins' coach

By STEVEN WINE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Jimmy Johnson has unexpectedly decided to resign Thursday as coach of the Miami Dolphins, his father said Wednesday night.

The Dolphins were eliminated from the NFL playoffs 38-3 at Denver last weekend, spoiling a bid to play at home in the Super Bowl on Jan. 31.

"Jimmy told me he was ready to retire and wanted to start enjoying himself," C.W. Johnson said from his home in Port Arthur, Texas. "He said the season wore on him. I told him I was glad and that was the best news I had heard in a long time."

The elder Johnson said his son told him "this is it for him in coaching. He said he was going down to his place in the Florida Keys and work on his house down there."

After Johnson's third season with Miami ended Saturday with the dismal defeat, he talked optimistically about next season, but he hasn't met with the media since then.

The recent death of Johnson's mother may have been a factor in his decision. He also complained frequently during the past season about how media scrutiny and criticism were more intense than when he coached the Dallas Cowboys.

Dolphins owner H. Wayne Huizenga, in California to complete the sale of his Florida Marlins baseball team, rushed back to Miami Wednesday night, apparently to meet with Johnson.

Dolphins media relations coordinator Neal Gulkis said no news conference had been scheduled as of late Wednesday.

"I don't know anything about it," Gulkis said.

Johnson, who led the Dallas Cowboys to two Super Bowl championships, was hired by the Dolphins in January 1996 and said he would have the team in the NFL title game in three years. But he won only one playoff game with Miami.

Johnson had a 27-21 record in three seasons with Miami and was 1-2 in two playoff appearances. His resignation means 10 of the 31 teams, including expansion Cleveland, have had to look for a new coach since the season ended.

Johnson's team made steady progress after he replaced Don Shula. The Dolphins went 8-8 in his first season, 9-7 in 1997 and 10-6 this season.

They made the playoffs in 1997 and earned their first playoff victory in four years this season, beating the Buffalo Bills 24-17.

Johnson said recently that he believes Miami needs only a couple of offensive playmakers to join the NFL's elite. Following the Denver game, he said he didn't consider the defeat devastating, but said Miami simply must earn a higher seed in next season's playoffs.

"I told our players that you need to win enough games during the season to get a bye, get people healthy and get ready for an opponent," Johnson said. "We didn't win enough games during the season to get that advantage."

A wave of late-season injuries and playing at Denver were too much for the Dolphins to overcome. The game was the last in a series of poor road performances by Miami.

Johnson enjoyed his greatest success with Dallas, winning the 1992 and 1993 Super Bowls while compiling a 51-38 record.

Johnson also succeeded in college, winning a national championship in 1987 at Miami. He had a 52-9 record in five seasons. Before that, he had a 29-25 record in five seasons at Oklahoma State.

middle linebacker Ben Leber seemed to make a tackle every time he was on the field.

There will never be another Jeff Kelly, but next year Leber will begin a legacy of his own. Junior outside linebacker Travis Litton stepped in for Ochs while he was injured and performed admirably and should be the front runner for that spot next year.

Of course there's this other guy who has made a few tackles in his career; he goes by the name of Mark Simoneau. He stands a good chance of succeeding Jeff Kelly on next year's All-America first team.

Freshman defensive tackle DeVane Robinson played well in a rotation with junior Damon McIntosh and Rowe. Throw in 6-6, 315 lb. freshman Eric Everley and K-State's tackles rival the Great Wall of China.

I suppose I should mention one of the nation's best defensive ends, Darren Howard, who will be back to complete his storied career as a Wildcat. Then there's sophomore Monty Beisel who began to turn his tremendous potential into production this past year. Looks to me like the line should do just fine next year.

It's no secret that the secondary struggled at times last year, but Neasman is the only starter departing and K-State's young secondary figures to play better next season after getting some experience. The safeties are, in a word, incredible.

Look for sophomore Jarrod Cooper and senior Lamar Chapman to be on All-America teams next year.

Sophomore Dyshod Carter and freshman Jerametrius Butler will only improve next year and could begin to remind Wildcat fans of the Chris Canty and Joe Gordon days.

Next year the K-State defense should be just as good if not better than this past year. The Cats have all the talent in the world and it will only be a matter of the entire defense keeping its focus throughout the course of the season.

When K-State finishes the 1999 football season number one in total defense, just remember you read it here first.

erase the 18-percent gap.

"The 4.7 increase is still good. We are not whining — it is a good increase," he said. "But 4.7 isn't 7.6. We have to have more."

Wefald said continuing to seek the higher increase will be difficult because in most states, the governor's budget proposal sets the maximum amount the legislature will approve. But from time to time, they will do more, he said.

"We plan to mount an aggressive campaign for the 7.6 increase," Wefald said.

Other parts of Graves' budget that affect K-State include a 2.5 percent increase for the Other Operating Expenses — the university's general operating fund — with 0.5 percent of the increase dedicated to funding Hale Library. The budget also continues a matching program that provides $2 in state fund for technology for every dollar of student fees. The two-for-one match means $1.5 million will go toward instructional equipment.

This is the second year for the two-for-one program and the 2.5-percent OOE increase. Peterson said the 0.5 percent of OOE designated for the library is a continuation of support started last year by Graves.

The 0.5 percent recommended by the governor will be matched by the university with money remaining in the OOE increase. The library will receive a total of 1 percent from the increase.

Dean of Libraries Brice Hobrock said the extra 0.5 percent provided by the university hurts the rest of the university.

"That extra half percent is important to the other departments," Hobrock said.

Peterson said Graves' proposals likely will pass the legislature with few changes, but she still will fight to see the proposals aren't reduced. Wefald also said he's confident that the smaller faculty-salary increase will pass along with Graves' other initiatives.

LENKNER

for creating rain that ended a county-wide drought and saved farmers' livelihoods. But Mulder and Scully found the truth: Kroner's television meteorologist was lovesick, and his emotions were responsible for lightning storms, tornadoes and dry spells. The case was solved.

But not before Kansas and its people had been shamed on FOX.

Kroner was mostly windmills and barns, with citizens (Kronerites?) who dressed in '30s-style clothes and raised hogs for fun. They had terrible Southern accents, drove 1950s farm trucks and spit a lot.

At the 20-year high school reunion, with the plot resolved and the world saved, the evening closed with a slow dance to Judy Garland singing "Over the Rainbow."

I don't usually watch the show; in fact, I hadn't seen an episode until this week. But I tuned in because Kroner wasn't supposed to be the only Kansas town on the broadcast. Manhattan was cut from the episode in the editing process.

The Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce sent city paraphernalia and K-State merchandise to the production crew. The items were supposed to be used on the set of a Manhattan hotel lobby.

Thank God they weren't.

The show's portrayal of the Sunflower State was something most Kansans wouldn't enjoy, and it wasn't accurate. K-State students, faculty and staff and Manhattan residents should be happy they weren't included.

A mention of Manhattan would have scared many viewers' impressions of the city and university, and little could have been done to change that first impression.

As Collegian editor this semester, I know our news stories might not always be the portrayal readers will wish for. They will call my desk with complaints that our news copy is off-base, incorrect or misleading. Others will call, applauding our hard-hitting coverage of a campus issue and asking for more.

Even if readers are upset about the stories we write or how we write them, there's one key difference between shows like "The X-Files" and the Collegian pages: We'll strive to make our reporting as accurate and fair as possible.

The other difference? If we slip up, you can call us on it and we'll answer. Use your power as a reader to make the Collegian better. After all, it's yours.

Call me with your comments. Write, e-mail or fax us a letter. Starting this semester, there's yet another way to voice your opinion. The "Campus Forum" is quick, easy and anonymous. Call 395-4444 and your 20-second opinion on anything will be campuswide ink in a matter of days.

Make your voices heard, even if your comments aren't the friendliest. I can take it. It's my job.

And if the stress becomes too great, you'll find me just a few miles away, hiding — in Kroner.

Union renovation continues

By LAUREN POSLADEK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Construction began last May on the first significant renovation project for the K-State Student Union since 1970.

Eight months into the project, Bernard Pitts Union executive director said although progress has been made, most of the work for each section will be ongoing throughout the renovation.

"This is actually a series of multiple, independent projects that are somehow related to each other," Pitts said. "Often we have to wait for progress to be made in one area before we can finish another section. To top it off, we have to be able to operate while all of this construction is going on. That's what makes this project challenging."

Nearly 60 percent of the $11.3 million budget is being spent on bringing electrical, plumbing and life-safety systems up to code as well as installing new heating, cooling and fire alarm systems.

Jack Connaughton, Union associate director, said the upgrades were necessary for safety reasons and will help create enough power to begin the larger improvements, especially the new Union Food Court.

A temporary wall was built during winter break in the current dining center to partition the construction on the new food court from the existing food center.

Eventually, the scramble area of the state room, where the food and beverage stations are now, will be a seating area.

The new food court will be similar to those found in shopping malls and will feature several types of fast food, including Burger King, Chick-fil-A, Subway and Freshen's, as well as Mexican and Chinese concepts. There still will be an à la carte/blue-plate option as well.

STEVEN DEARINGER/KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Student Union Stateroom is under construction and will be opened in three stages ending in June. Temporary seating has been set up in the hallway and the textbook area of the K-State Union Bookstore.

Pitts said the food court will be the primary focus of this semester, and will be opened in three stages between now and June.

"The first stage will be the actual food court," Pitts said. "After we open that, we will work on transforming the current food center into a seating area."

While construction is underway, some of the former seating area is limited, and chairs have been moved to the main area of the first floor and to the space where textbooks were sold back to the K-State Union Bookstore.

Seating has been reduced from 900 to 670, and after construction there will be room for 750 seats.

Connaughton said he doesn't think that the change of seating will be a problem for students.

"The space we are making will be a nice, open, attractive area for students to eat in," he said. "If it gets crowded, there are many other areas to eat in the Union besides the food court. We have plenty of square footage, so we'll be OK."

In addition to the food court, there will be other changes to the first floor. Commerce Bank and the Student ID Center will move to the current seating area in front of the temporary wall.

The Starbucks coffee stand will move into the space where the bank was located. The information counter still will serve snacks but will be upgraded to look nicer.

A new outside entrance also might be added, allowing the counter to stay open later than the rest of the Union, Connaughton said.

The lower level of the bookstore will be expanded 5,000 to 7,000 feet to the north, and a new storefront will be put in, Pitts said.

The textbook area will remain upstairs, but the only entrance will be through the lower level. While the bookstore area is under construction, it will be moved to the second floor where Cat's Pause and the KSU rooms are.

Connaughton said bookstore construction is expected to last from Sept. 1999 until Jan. 2000. When the bookstore moves back downstairs, Cat's Pause will be refinished.

The Union will remain open and functional during each phase of the construction project.

Donations fall, need rises during cold winter months

By JODY JOHNSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When the temperature falls, so does the number of blood donors.

Accidents and health problems during the winter months increase the need for blood products in hospitals, but the cold weather makes it difficult for blood collectors to find enough donors to supply the life-saving blood.

Terri Dunaway, blood services communications manager at the Central Plains Region American Red Cross, said that during the holiday season people are busy shopping and preparing for relatives, leaving less time for blood donation.

"It's a difficult time of the year to collect blood," she said.

Nancy Powell, donor resource consultant for the Central Plains Region American Red Cross, said drives during the warmer months tend to be more successful.

"Our summer blood drive in Manhattan is much better than our winter drive," Powell said.

Powell said there were 265 donors during the July blood drive in Cico Park.

In December, the number dropped to 207. The reason for the decline is that more students leave town for winter break than for summer, and the weather is too cold to get out, she said.

Beryl Adams, executive director of the American Red Cross Riley County chapter, said winter illnesses are another problem that lower the blood supply.

"People who are sick cannot donate blood," she said.

Although the amount of blood donated tends to decrease during winter months, the need for it stays the same. The American Red Cross Central Plains Region has an obligation to supply blood to 100 hospitals in Kansas.

"We have to have the same amount of blood regardless of the weather," Dunaway said.

"Blood doesn't take a holiday" Adams said doctors and scientists are finding more ways to use blood to treat people, so the need for blood is always strong.

"More and more blood is needed to treat people every day," she said.

Powell said each person who donates one unit of blood can make a difference to several people.

"A minimum of three people are helped by one unit of blood," she said.

Blood is made up of three components that can be separated for specific uses, Dunaway said. A surgery patient might need a transfusion of the red cells from blood, a cancer patient might need the platelets, and a burn victim might need the plasma.

"December's blood drive went to help over 600 people around this region," Dunaway said. "One donation can make a significant impact on our blood supply."

University continues effort for franchised cable access in fall

■ New system would add five education channels on K-State campus.

By KELLY FURNAS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the K-State campus gets closer to creating a cable television distribution facility, the university is negotiating agreements with the city of Manhattan and Multimedia Cablevision to ensure that cable access through the university is available by fall 1999.

City regulations require K-State to obtain a franchise in order to cross any city right-of-way.

K-State will need to lay wire under Denison Avenue to serve the Kramer Complex and Jardine Terrace Apartments.

The City Commission has seen the proposed ordinance but will need to bring it up at two more meetings before it can be approved.

William Frost, city attorney, said his office drafted the proposed ordinance at the request of K-State Telecommunications.

"This is the same process that KPL, Southwestern Bell and Multimedia had to go through," he said.

"To my knowledge, no one has expressed any concerns about it."

Jerry Marrow, cable television administrator for K-State Telecommunications, said that in addition to city approval, the university is also negotiating a contract with Multimedia Cablevision to provide entertainment channels to the campus.

"It's my intention to buy most of the entertainment channels from the local cable provider," he said. "Then we hope to augment that with five locally provided channels."

The university's interest in becoming a cable provider stems from the need for more educational programming than was offered by Multimedia Cablevision.

K-State has not yet signed a contract for Multimedia Cablevision entertainment channels.

"We will take their cable for X dollars, and then distribute it campuswide," Marrow said. He said he could not disclose the cost until the contract is signed, but that distribution would be at a "substantial discount to students on campus."

In addition to the contract with Multimedia Cablevision, the university will pay a five-percent franchise fee to the city based on its gross cable television system revenue.

Although the gross revenue does not include fees collected for providing academic programming or Multimedia Cablevision programming, there is a minimum fee of $5,000 a year.

Further down the road, a cable system on campus might be able to offer services such as high-speed Internet access through the cable lines or potentially up to 3,000 fully digitized, fully compressed channels.

"It's a possibility for the future," Marrow said. "It's a big pipe, and we can put a lot of information in it."

BLOOD

It is safe to donate blood every 56 days. Donors must be at least 17 years old, 110 pounds and in good health. The entire donation process takes about an hour and includes an evaluation to make sure the donor is healthy.

"For the most part, if you're feeling well the day of donation, you are an eligible blood donor," Dunaway said.

Most medications will not deter people from donating blood, she said.

"It doesn't cost you anything to do this, and it's a relatively painless experience," Adams said. "It's a wonderful feeling knowing you're helping somebody."

Because of the need for blood during the winter, January has been declared National Volunteer Blood Donor Month by President Clinton and Gov. Bill Graves.

"January is typically a time when donations are low because we begin to see the bad weather or donors have the flu," said Gina Coffman, donor recruitment representative for the American Red Cross Central Plains Region.

Coffman said she hopes January will make people more educated about the importance of giving blood.

"Less than five percent of eligible donors actually donate blood," Coffman said. "We are asking people in good health to help supplement the blood supply."

Brees, Boilermakers turn Wildcat mistakes into 37-34 victory

SAN ANTONIO — With the final chapter of the 1998 K-State football saga ending at the hands of the Purdue Boilermakers on Dec. 29 at the Builders Square Alamo Bowl, the bittersweet taste of an 11-2 season isn't the only thing Wildcat fans have to deal with.

BALMER

Outside of the 37-34 loss in San Antonio, which left the Cats ranked ninth in the ESPN/USA Today Coaches Poll and 10th in the Associated Press Top 25, the K-State coaching staff had some holes to fill due to the departure of four coaches.

Three of the positions were filled by head coach Bill Snyder at a press conference on Jan. 4. The position vacated by Mark Mangino, who served as assistant head coach and helped coordinate the Cats' recruiting efforts, had not been filled at press time.

Much of the attention focused on the Cats' disappointing finish has been shifted to personnel changes, but the repercussions of the Cats' season-ending back-to-back losses might remain in the minds of the players, coaches and fans for some time.

The Cats rebounded from their worst first-half performance of the season by unleashing 21 fourth-quarter points, the final seven tallied by tight end Justin Swift on a 2-yard touchdown pass that put the Cats up 34-30 with 1:24 remaining in the game.

While the score put K-State ahead for the first time in the night, the 84 seconds left by the Cats provided a window of opportunity for the Boilermakers.

After a disappointing start, Purdue quarterback Drew Brees capped the Boilermakers' comeback with a 24-yard touchdown pass to receiver Isaac Jones with 30 seconds remaining in the game. Brees, the offensive most valuable player, finished with 230 yards of passing on 25 of 53 attempts, tossing three touchdowns and three interceptions.

"That last drive, our execution fell apart in the secondary," defensive coordinator Mike Stoops said. "That's kind of been the story the last two games out. We've played good enough to give ourselves an opportunity to win, and we're just not getting it done."

Suffering from a sub-par performance similar to that of Brees, quarterback Michael Bishop finished his career at K-State on a down note, completing only nine of 24 passes and throwing a season-worst four interceptions.

JILL JARSULIC/KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State tight end Justin Swift escapes the grasp of Purdue defenders and hauls the ball into the end zone, putting the Cats ahead by three points with just 1:24 left to play. The Cats defense couldn't hold Purdue's offense, though, and the Boilermakers went on to score one more touchdown to win the game.

"I thought we were pretty lethargic," Snyder said. "I think we were still reeling from three weeks ago (at the Big 12 Championship Game). I had hoped that wouldn't be the case. I can't say I wasn't concerned about it."

"Tonight was a culmination of maybe three weeks of disappointment."

The disappointment translated into shoddy offensive play for a majority of the contest.

Then, in the eleventh hour, the Cats' offense awoke. Setting an Alamo Bowl record with 21 points in the fourth quarter, K-State inched back in on David Allen's 3-yard touchdown run and receiver Darnell McDonald's 88-yard touchdown reception, also a bowl record for longest pass play.

But the sudden burst of offense wasn't enough to silence Purdue, which successfully defended its Alamo Bowl championship of last season.

"They played excellent. You have to give credit to their team," Snyder said. "They were very physical and fine players."

Although eclipsed by the Wildcat loss, Allen turned in a solid performance and offered a preview of what K-State fans can expect in the backfield next season. The Liberty, Mo., native pounded out 83 yards and a touchdown on the ground and continued to excel on punt returns, netting 67 yards on three attempts.

The loss cut particularly deep into the Cats, piling on more sorrow after the disappointing end to the regular season. While the team might not have met all of its high expectations, Snyder said he told the team after the game that its two losses shouldn't tarnish the achievements of 1998.

"I think basically what we talked about was reminiscent of three weeks ago," Snyder said. "I don't think there's any reason for them to lose sight of the fact that they won 11 ball games. They did so many positive things throughout the course of the year."

"I told them I understand their pain and their hurt and that it was, again, something that we have to be strong enough to overcome," he said. "I talked to the seniors about how much they have meant to this program and how much we care about them. I talked to the underclassmen about the challenge that will be presented for the ensuing year."

Quarterback battle finally heats up in 4th quarter

By JOEL WHITE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

SAN ANTONIO — It was supposed to be a shootout between two gunslingers at the Builders Square Alamo Bowl in San Antonio.

Instead, both quarterback Michael Bishop of K-State and Drew Brees of Purdue were shot down — or picked off — by the opposing defenses in the 37-34 Boilermaker victory.

Bishop, the Davey O'Brien Award winner, threw for 182 yards on nine-for-24 passing and three touchdowns, but was intercepted four times. In the Wildcats' previous 12 games he averaged 237 yards per game passing and had thrown only four interceptions.

The interceptions thrown against the Boilermakers came from trying too hard to set the tone, Bishop said.

"I think some plays I wanted to get something going and get the crowd into it and get everybody in their right place," he said. "I may have pressed a little bit too hard and made some mental mistakes, and some of those mistakes hurt us."

Purdue safety Billy Gustin picked off two Bishop passes, while safety Adrian Beasley and linebacker John Reeves each added one. Reeves' interception came from a desperation throw on the final play of the game.

Bishop tried to build momentum for the sluggish Wildcats, who apparently hadn't recovered from their loss to Texas A&M in the Big 12 Championship game on Dec. 5 — a loss that might have kept the team from playing for the national championship in the Tostitos Fiesta Bowl.

"I thought we were pretty lethargic. I think we are still reeling from three weeks ago," Coach Bill Snyder said. "I had hoped that wouldn't be the case, but I can't say I wasn't concerned about it."

"I think everybody tried not to let that have an impact on this ballgame," he said.

With the exception of the Boilermakers' final scoring drive, which Brees orchestrated, his play also was marked with a number of mistakes. He completed 25 of 53 passes for 230 yards with three touchdowns and three interceptions. The Big Ten offensive player of the year's production was well below his average of 312.8 yards per game.

Wildcat safety Jarrod Cooper and cornerback Dyshod Carter both intercepted Brees in the second quarter. Safety Lamar Chapman intercepted a pass in the third.

In the Boilermakers' final drive which started with 1:24 to play, Brees led the team 80 yards in six plays covering 54 seconds. The drive ended with a 24-yard strike to receiver Isaac Jones.

Brees said he redeemed himself in the game-winning drive. "I wasn't on today, but that last drive I guess kind of capped it," he said.

Pep rally, Riverwalk highlight trip for 30,000 of K-State's faithful fans

By TRAVIS D. LENKNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

SAN ANTONIO — Perhaps Chris Bush was right.

Bush, a K-State fan from Edwardsville, Kan., said on Dec. 27 that she was surprised more Wildcat supporters weren't in San Antonio. At a party that night, Purdue fans outnumbered Wildcats.

"But maybe the purple people are slow getting here," she said.

They arrived.

More than 10,000 purple-clad fans filled Freeman Coliseum on Dec. 28 for a pep rally before the Wildcats took the field in the Builders Square Alamo Bowl the next night.

Bowl officials said 30,000 K-State fans attended the actual game.

Coach Bill Snyder and members of the football team arrived an hour after the rally began, shortly after finishing their final practice before the game.

After a deafening welcome, Snyder addressed the crowd; senior members of the team surrounded him on a stage as their teammates and the coaching staff stood below.

"This is a very special time for me. I hope it's a very special time for these guys down there," Snyder said.

Snyder honored the team's seniors, saying they had brought pride, honor and tradition to the school's program. He thanked the Alamo Bowl committee for being host to K-State when other bowls wouldn't.

"We appreciate the fact that they were our allies. They gave us an opportunity when some other people didn't," Snyder said.

He said K-State's players will continue to represent Wildcat fans as best they can, regardless of where they're playing.

"I'd like to think our players understand what you mean to our program. And I'd like to think they understand that you also had a tremendous disappointment, just as each of us did, over the sequence of events that took place this last December 5 and 6," Snyder said. "But I'll tell you these young people are here to represent you the very best that they can."

"It's important for us to play this game with great pride, to play it with great courage and also to prove to you that you made the right decision by being here with us in San Antonio," he said.

Thousands of K-State supporters arrived in San Antonio on Dec. 28, boosting the number of Cat backers on city streets and at the afternoon pep rally. Though bowl officials worried that K-State fans wouldn't travel to Texas because they wanted a better bowl bid, Snyder said he knew that wouldn't happen.

"I was asked by representative of the Alamo Bowl, 'Would you please address your fans and ask and encourage your fans to attend the football game? We need to have them here,'" Snyder said.

He couldn't finish the story without stopping to choke back emotion.

"And I said, 'No, I'm not going to do that,'" he said. "These are K-State fans."

As Snyder stopped and moved back from the microphone, the arena fell silent. One second later, it roared.

"I said, 'These are K-State fans,'" Snyder said when the crowd stopped cheering. "These are our fans. And I assure you, they will do what is right."

"You have never let this program down, and I have always known that you wouldn't," he said.

Senior Travis Ochs was one of the team captains who spoke after Snyder. He thanked the team's fans for their support and gave them hope for a Dec. 29 victory. "I just want to thank everybody for all of the great memories over the years," Ochs said. "Let's go out tomorrow night and make another one."

When the captains had finished, the coliseum fell dark until indoor fireworks and sharp reports pierced the air as the K-State Marching Band played "Wildcat Victory."

Fans said the rally, with only a few empty seats in Freeman Coliseum, was one of the best they'd seen.

"This was fabulous. It was awesome," said Sandy Bradley, a former K-State employee from Topeka. "We wouldn't have missed it, because we just have such great pride and admiration for the program."

"It would have taken quite a bit for us to miss this," her husband, Don Bradley, said.

Before the team's arrival, Gov. Bill Graves, K-State president Jon Wefald and U.S. Sen. Pat Roberts spoke to the crowd. The band, cheerleaders and Classy Cats also performed as Willie the Wildcat led cheers and moved through the audience.

"I have a message here," Roberts said as he began his speech. "It's from the parking lot attendant."

"It's to the chairman of the BCS Bowl Committee and his Cadillac: Your lights are on, but your battery's dead," he said.

Roberts said K-State's large following, even as fans question whether the team should have played in a better bowl game, should send a clear message.

"The purple is here. The purple will always be here," Roberts said. "Fickle? Oh, no. Wake up, bowl America. Wake up, BCS. If the bowl were held in Timbuktu or Baghdad or Bosnia, we would be there."

Wefald touted the team's accomplishments since its dismal seasons in the 1980s and Snyder's 1989 arrival. He said this year's 11-win season demonstrated that K-State's football improvement is the "greatest turnaround in the history of American football."

The season was especially memorable, he said, when the team broke its 29-year losing streak against Nebraska on Nov. 14.

"As long as I live, I'll never forget 20,000 students coming out onto that field when we beat the University of Nebraska," Wefald said, drowned out by the cheering crowd. "We did it!"

"K-State never, ever gives up," he said later. "Never!"

Be afraid. It was bad enough that I had my own column last semester. Now I have my own page. Truly a frightening thought. Allow me to outline some of the changes you'll see on this page for the coming semester.

The name of the page will be "Diversions." It has not bore that name since fall 1997, and I find it to be a much more appropriate name. This page is, basically, a "diversion" from the normal campus and national/international news you read about each day. It's a fun section of sorts, one that can be a nice break from the news.

You will also see some top-notch cartoons from newcomers Vince Wade and Randy Regier, who are sure to provide you with a much-needed chuckle during that drab 7:30 a.m. physics lecture. Regier's cartoon, "The Gongfarmers," is a dark version of "The Far Side" and will run as a daily strip, while Wade's comic will run as a block comic every Tuesday and Thursday. Old favorites "Conspiracy Theory" and "Dilbert" once again will grace the page with their presence.

The crossword puzzle will stay. You can rest easy

Also of note is something that hasn't been done for quite some time, and something that I hope will be a welcome addition. Every Friday, the block cartoon will be replaced by the Friday movie times for both Westloop Theatre and Seth Child Cinema.

Your input will make or break these changes. Whether you like them, hate them with a passion or have any suggestions, please don't hesitate to let me know. Just drop me a line at the e-mail address at the top of this page. Believe it or not, I do care what you think. As long as the criticism is constructive, there are no holds barred.

DiFranco's latest distinctive; lyrics have substance

By KRISTEN DYMACEK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Singer, songwriter and guitarist Ani DiFranco's distinctive yet familiar sound, blending punk and folk with a little blues, pop and jazz, can be heard on her latest release, "Up Up Up Up Up." The release is sure to be a hit with DiFranco's longtime listeners.

The use of few instruments on her 12th album, as in the songs "Virtue" and "Trickle Down," adds to the laid-back, acoustical sound that fans have grown to love in her previous releases, such as "Little Plastic Castle" and "Living In Clip."

Even though the music takes on a lighter side, the lyrics show no lightness. "I've got a darkness that I have to feed/I've got a sadness that grows up around me like a weed," are a couple of darker lines from the track, "Jukebox."

DiFranco's poetic lyrics help her image as a serious singer who takes on serious topics.

The problem is DiFranco thinks her lyrics are serious enough to go on and on and on. The last track on the compact disc, "Hat Shaped Hat," continues for 13 minutes, and by the end of the song there is a chance the listener has fallen asleep or forgotten what the song originally was about.

DiFranco's distinctive sound does begin to get a little repetitious in a couple of the tracks. Sometimes it's hard to tell where one song ends and the other begins.

After listening to "Up Up Up Up Up" a few times, I actually can say that I like it, just as long as I'm able to skip a song every now and then.

This album is not for people who like a CD with a good driving beat and simple lyrics. But for DiFranco fanatics, this is a must-have CD that you will enjoy just as much as her others.

"Up Up Up Up Up" will be released in stores Jan. 19.

Senate to focus on Saferide

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate will begin a week from today and its agenda for the spring semester is a busy one.

"We have a lot to do in the little bit of time we have left," Jake Worcester, senate vice chairman, said. "(Last semester) I felt like we passed things that pertained to students, and hopefully we can continue that this semester."

Senate Chairman Gabe Eckert said Senate had three main issues to concentrate on.

One goal is to have some kind of closure to the Saferide committee established last semester.

The committee was established to compare Saferide programs at other universities, to look at the costs and to see if there is an excessive need for a Saferide program at K-State. It will be turning in a report soon to Senate.

"I think it will be really good to sit down with the facts, and see if we need it. And, if so, how the service should be provided," Eckert said.

Eckert said the report will allow Senate to step forward and take action to either work towards the program or call an end to the discussion.

Apryl Mathes, chair of the Saferide committee, said things are going well with the committee, but she said she doesn't think they've reached a conclusion. They're still gathering information.

"I would say from our committee's point, we would all like to see a Saferide program," she said. "We see the benefits of it."

But, Mathes said, the committee still doesn't know if the program is feasible for Manhattan.

Another issue Eckert said Senate plans on addressing this semester is additional library funding.

On State Education Day, Eckert said student senators, committee chairs and cabinet members will relate to Kansas legislators personal stories about how the shortage of library resources has affected them.

Eckert said he feels additional funding from the state is the long-term solution to the library problem. He said student privilege fees are only a short-term solution.

"It's kind of like applying a Band-Aid to the problem," he said.

Library funding is not something that can be solved in one year, Eckert said.

"I'm confident the issue will be solved in a few years," he said. "It's a challenge to look at what will effect us in the next 5 to 10 years."

Senate also is working on a revised plan for a fall break to present to Faculty Senate. Fall break was defeated by Faculty Senate last year, but Eckert said they've taken some of the criticisms and ideas of Faculty Senate and tried to incorporate them into this year's plan.

Student senators are looking at how to maximize the educational benefits of the total days students spend in school, Eckert said. He said a fall break wouldn't really be a break, but a chance for students to reassess where they're at and where they want to be. Then they can come back and really maximize their education.

Eckert said he hopes the spring semester will go as smoothly as last semester.

"Student government, and in particular Student Senate, was extra efficient last semester," he said. "As long as we keep the mind set that we're here to do what's best for students and to tackle these long-term issues, I think it's going to be a successful semester."

Market good for KSU grads

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of the most agonizing chores for many graduating seniors is finding a job after their college days are done. However, things might be looking brighter for those graduating from K-State.

According to the Post-graduation Bachelor Degree Statistics, an annual report conducted by Career and Employment Services, 93 percent of 1998 graduates identified employment, position title, salaries or graduate school.

Tracey Fraser, director of Career and Employment Services, said the report is done every year for two reasons. One is a summary of the job market for the respective class. This information is sent to central administration, deans and faculty. The second reason is basic information sent to the Kansas Board of Regents.

"K-State graduates demonstrate a higher caliber of competitive skills, strong analytical skills and a higher work ethic than some other graduates from universities," Fraser said.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said this work ethic and the quality of faculty and academic programs are a few of the reasons why K-State graduates are in high demand.

"The reputation of the students' work ethic and the quality of academic programs is well known in the region and across the nation," Bosco said.

When the study was conducted in 1997, only 88 percent of the graduates reported post-graduation employment. Fraser said the numbers are rising because of the good market for graduates and the stable economy.

Stephen Kiefer, head of the Department of Psychology, said most of his students have found jobs because they are broadly trained, adaptable and have a lot of options in positions.

"K-STATE GRADUATES DEMONSTRATE A HIGHER CALIBER OF COMPETITIVE SKILLS, STRONG ANALYTICAL SKILLS AND A HIGHER WORK ETHIC THAN SOME OTHER GRADUATES FROM UNIVERSITIES."

— TRACEY FRASER,
DIRECTOR OF CAREER AND EMPLOYMENT SERVICES

"There are very few jobs for individuals that do not require having to interact with people," Kiefer said.

"Psychology students have to know human behavior and how to communicate, so they have many options," he said.

Fraser said the many opportunities students have at the university, such as leadership and service-learning opportunities, extracurricular activities and competitiveness in their course work, make K-State students more marketable in the work force.

"From the time students come to K-State, they want to get involved in the campus and community," Fraser said. "These are important factors that feed into the development of the equation."

Fraser said internships are another important factor in K-State graduates' attractiveness to companies because they give students an opportunity to apply what is learned in the classroom and gives a practical, hands-on experience.

"Internships are a two-way street," Bosco said. "It is an aggressive program that allows students to try-on a career and employers to become familiar with potential employees."

A new section of the study was to look at the placement of graduates six months after their graduation. Eighty-eight percent said their academic background was useful in their career, and that they liked what they learned in the classroom.

"Students are seeing the relationship of academics and their career plans as they graduate and get jobs," Fraser said.

Bosco said the trend in companies hiring K-State graduates should continue because of the quality of academic programs and the caliber of students who graduate from the university.

"K-Staters were in high demand 30 years ago when I was a student here, and it continues today and on into the future," Bosco said.

U.S. attacks Iraqi air defenses

By ROBERT BURNS
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — For the third-straight day, American warplanes attacked air defense sites in northern Iraq on Wednesday, and the Clinton administration said military pressure would continue as long as Iraq kept threatening U.S. pilots.

The string of confrontations, which began after a mid-December bombing campaign by British and American forces and has accelerated this week, is raising speculation that President Clinton might order a new bombing campaign to silence Iraq's air defenses.

White House press secretary Joe Lockhart told reporters the administration intended to continue its policy of applying economic and military pressure, but he said there were other options.

"There's a credible and robust threat of force in the region if we determine that that needs to be used," Lockhart said, referring to U.S. land- and sea-based air power in the Persian Gulf area.

The Pentagon said eight more F-16 attack planes and four KC-135 refueling planes will arrive in the area this week to beef up Operation Northern Watch, the no-fly zone enforcement.

At the State Department, spokesman James Rubin said Secretary of State Madeleine Albright will visit Egypt and Saudi Arabia in late January to discuss humanitarian assistance to the Iraqi people. Rubin accused Iraqi President Saddam Hussein of withholding some foreign-aid donations meant to relieve the Iraqi people's suffering caused by U.N. economic sanctions.

"While complaining that the Iraqi people are suffering, Iraq has failed to order and distribute food and medicine that would alleviate problems in this area," Rubin said.

U.S. officials speaking on condition of anonymity said Albright, in her talks with Egyptian and Saudi leaders, also planned to discuss U.S. hopes for overthrowing Hussein.

Lockhart indicated the administration believes that with his defiance Hussein is losing a battle of attrition.

"We've had a policy of containing Saddam Hussein since the end of the Gulf War, and that policy is based on crippling economic sanctions that have cost him $120 billion, at least, since the end of the war, degrading his ability to threaten his neighbors and to reconstitute or deliver weapons of mass destruction," Lockhart said. "And that's the policy we're going to continue to pursue until we see some positive change and some indication that Saddam Hussein is willing to disarm."

In Wednesday's incident, Iraq fired at least one surface-to-air missile at a flight of four U.S. Air Force F-15E and other American planes patrolling the no-fly zone over northern Iraq, but missed, according to U.S. officials.

In the confrontation near the city of Mosul, F-15s fired two missiles at the air defense site, and U.S. officials said the missiles scored direct hits. Iraqi officials claimed four American missiles struck a house in a civilian area.

In addition, attack planes and Marine Corps EA-6B electronic warfare planes fired three HARM missiles, which travel at supersonic speed and are designed to destroy radars. U.S. officials did not say whether the HARM missiles reached their targets.

The American planes returned safely to their base in Turkey, U.S. officials said.

The incidents underscored an increasingly aggressive Iraqi challenge to the no-fly zones. Iraq nearly has doubled the number of surface-to-air missile batteries in the restricted flight zones and has been using them with increasing frequency, U.S. officials said.

Pentagon officials said two Iraqi aircraft violated the southern no-fly zone on Wednesday and two in the northern zone. There were no U.S. or allied planes nearby to respond, they said.

Will it ever end?

Anderson Avenue expansion project enters primary construction phase

Anderson Avenue construction should be finished by Nov. 20, or Bayer Construction Co. Inc. will have to pay the city of Manhattan $2,500 for each day the work is not complete.

However, if Bayer Construction, the contractors for the project, finish before the scheduled date, the city of Manhattan will pay an additional $2,500 to Bayer Construction for every day it finishes before the deadline. Jerry Petty, Manhattan public works director, said this is the first time the City of Manhattan has added an incentive/disincentive clause to a public works project.

"If I have ever written a $2,500 check on behalf of Manhattan, this is the one I want to write," Petty said. "I think it is important for the city that we get this finished."

Both the incentive and disincentive clause will be capped at $150,000.

The only thing that won't be finished by Nov. 20 is landscaping and permanent pavement marking, said Kent Moorman, project manager from HWS Consulting Group Inc.

These two things are projected to be done by June 2000.

Bayer Construction Vice President Neil Horton said he and his company have several goals for the project. They want to make sure it's a safe project for both the public and the workers, minimize disruption to the public, produce a quality project that Bayer Construction and the city can be proud of and maintain open lines of communication.

Phase one of the project will begin on Feb. 1. The first step will be installing a precast concrete storm box by Nichols Hall that eventually will connect with an existing storm drainage box along Memorial Stadium.

As part of this construction, a dangerous storm sewer opening by the Natatorium will be closed.

Part of phase one also includes tearing down K-State's stone retaining wall along Anderson Avenue. It will be replaced by a two-tiered retaining wall built further back from the road.

"It will be a nice-looking wall when it's done," Horton said.

The pillars at Mid Campus Drive and south of Thompson Hall will also be torn down, but will be relocated further north. They will be dismantled block by block and numbered so they can be rebuilt exactly as they were.

Horton said he hopes to begin phase two, which involves installing storm sewer boxes on the opposite side of Anderson Avenue, by early summer.

Phase three and four will include significant reconstruction on the intersection of Sunset and Anderson avenues, and the final phase will be the milling and overlaying for the entire width of Anderson.

Horton said driveways of houses and apartments will be disrupted at times, but they will try to minimize that disruption and find alternate parking close to the houses.

Apartments along Anderson will be another obstacle, but Horton said he hopes construction

Senate might invite Clinton for testimony

By DAVID ESPO
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Before a jury of 100 silent senators, House prosecutors on Thursday demanded President Clinton's removal from office, charging he had "piled perjury upon perjury" and obstructed justice. Senate Republican leaders said Clinton might be invited to testify at his impeachment trial.

"I think he should be invited, or at least I don't have a problem with him being invited," GOP Whip Don Nickles told reporters at the conclusion of the historic, 6-hour trial session. Majority Leader Trent Lott also had expressed at least passing interest in the idea, Republican sources said. Lott's office declined comment.

Inside the Senate chamber, where monumental issues of war and peace have been thrashed out for more than a century, the first presidential impeachment trial in 131 years unfolded in an atmosphere of uncommon gravity.

"Failure to bring President Clinton to account ... will cause a cancer to be present in our society for generations," said James Sensenbrenner, R-Wisc., standing in the well of the chamber to address the senators and a nationwide television audience counted in the millions.

The nation's 42nd president was in the White House, preparing for Tuesday's State of the Union address, when Chief Justice William Rehnquist rapped the gavel and announced that the Senate would convene as a court of impeachment.

Sergeant-at-Arms James Ziglar admonished all to remain silent on pain of imprisonment.

Silent they were, the senators at their seats; those spectators lucky — or influential — enough to have space in the galleries above; the president's lawyers and House prosecutors seated around separate custom-made curved tables at the base of the rostrum and Rehnquist, presiding in his judicial robe.

With the exception of two brief breaks, the trial remained in

Library to announce million-dollar donor

By JOE HURLA
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The ongoing effort to fill Hale Library with books is like a jigsaw puzzle for Dean of Libraries Brice Hobrock. He said he hopes to move closer to completing the funding puzzle by gathering some more pieces.

While a proposal is being prepared that would raise student privilege fees by about two dollars per credit hour, Hobrock continues to look elsewhere for funding.

One place he is looking is to donors. On Jan. 25, the name of the person who is making a donation of about $1 million will be revealed.

"All of this is going to come to a head," Hobrock said. "We'll make a formal announcement with appropriate ceremonies and a dedication of the science library."

Hobrock said the forthcoming million dollars will not be the last that is heard of this particular donor. More will be coming, eventually, in a bequest.

Hobrock said he plans to divide this money between paying off the standing library debt, which remains from the renovations on the building, and the acquisitions endowment.

The endowment, which will receive the majority of the funds, is used to purchase books, journals and electronic databases. He said these were priorities because K-State has

King observance stresses community service

By KELLY EVENSON
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The observance of Martin Luther King Jr. Day typically has been a break from school where students take a day to catch their breath before the semester begins in full gear.

The organizers of this year's observance, however, want people to think otherwise.

"A Day On, Not a Day Off" is the theme for the King observance Jan. 9-22. Keener Tippin, co-chair for the Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Committee, said the idea of the theme is to use the holiday as a time to help the community, not for relaxation.

"We want people to not use the holiday as time for rest and relaxation but a time to benefit the community," Tippin said.

The kickoff for K-State's observance was Wednesday with the Hoops for Hunger Knockout Challenge during halftime of the K-State vs. Nebraska women's basketball game. Celebrities from the local media played against community leaders, and attendants at the game were requested to bring non-perishable food items for distribution at the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

"This is a way to restock the Breadbasket after the holidays," Pat Hudgins, committee co-chair, said. "Even though it is a holiday, people should put their hands on and not take the day off."

Monday, the official observance of Martin Luther King Jr. Day, various community service projects are planned to help different service agencies in Manhattan, such as Habitat for Humanity, Manhattan Parks and Resources and the Manhattan Home Project. These projects are being done in cooperation with the K-State Community Service Program.

Dana Grant Catania, committee community service coordinator, said projects were coordinated in the Manhattan area and volunteers were asked to sign up in 2-hour time blocks to work with the various agencies. About 150 volunteers have agreed to set aside time on the holiday.

"This is a relatively easy way for them to make a difference and to go along with Martin Luther King's dream," Grant Catania said. "It may only be a small contribution, but it can make a difference."

John Leonard Harris will be giving a presentation at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the Union Forum Hall, titled "What if Dr. King Were Alive Today?" The lecture is sponsored by the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee.

There will be a reception for Kathleen Greene and Leo Prieto, recipients of the Commerce Bank Presidential Award for Distinguished Service to Minority Education, at 3:30 p.m. Jan. 20 in the Union Cottonwood Room.

Hudgins said she hopes people will understand Martin Luther King Jr. Day isn't a black holiday, but it is a national holiday for everyone to realize who King was and what he stood for.

"It is unfortunate all children do not celebrate the holiday," Hudgins said. "It is a time to remember Dr. King's legacy and to keep his dream alive."

Dick Gregory, comedian/social commentator and activist during the 1960s, will address the week's theme and discuss the civil-rights movement at noon Jan. 21 in the Main Ballroom in the K-State Student Union. Tippin said Gregory has been vocal in saying the CIA's involvement with drug cartels needs to be investigated.

"We feel fortunate to have someone of Mr. Gregory's caliber as a keynote speaker," Tippin said. "He has a keen insight into what the civil rights movement involved and to the work that was begun by Dr. King and others."

The most important message Hudgins said she hopes people will receive during the observance is the concept that although everyone might have differences, a difference can be made.

"Most people do not have a concept, or do not realize, that the way things are now isn't the way things have always been," Hudgins said. "We should set our differences aside not for a day but forever to make a difference."

Former principal charged with marijuana possession

EMPORIA, Kan. — A former elementary school principal who resigned after police found marijuana in his car was charged with possession of the drug and battery of a police officer Wednesday.

Keith Earl Entress, 44, was charged in Lyon County District Court with one felony count of marijuana possession and misdemeanor counts of possession of drug paraphernalia and battery of a law-enforcement officer, according to court records.

Entress resigned as principal of Americus Elementary School after police arrested him Monday.

A preliminary hearing has been scheduled for 3 p.m. on Feb. 1.

Entress was convicted in 1974 of marijuana possession in Reno County District Court.

Police said the incident happened Monday afternoon following a two-vehicle, non-injury accident in Emporia.

Officer Lance Delgado testified in an affidavit that Entress could not locate his proof of insurance. Delgado said the insurance might be in the glove box and then reached through the passenger window and opened it, the affidavit said.

"Before I could reach into the opened glove box, Entress, who was standing to my right, pushed me out of the way and frantically reached into the glove box and pulled out the paper contents of the glove box," the officer said in the affidavit.

The officer then searched the glove box and found a clear plastic bag of what he believed to be marijuana. The officer also found a brass pipe containing burnt residue laying inside the ashtray, the affidavit said.

Entress remains free on $750 bond.

Graves' transportation plan leaves legislators skeptical

TOPEKA — Members of the first legislative committee to review Gov. Bill Graves' proposed transportation program quickly zeroed in on his plan to more than double the state's debt.

Some legislators had doubts about whether the state even needs a new eight-year program after hearing from Department of Transportation officials Thursday.

Even without a new eight-year plan, the state would spend $8.2 billion over the next eight years on highway, bridge, airport, railroad and public-transit improvements, transportation officials told members of the House Appropriations Committee.

Graves' proposal would bump that up to nearly $10.7 billion and require $2.1 billion in new bonds.

The state's total debt — highway, prison and university construction bonds included — is $1.2 billion now. With Graves' program, Kansas would go from last among states in debt per resident to 35th.

While some legislators expressed concerns about the cost of Graves' plan, a group of transportation improvement backers said the plan wasn't ambitious enough.

Economic Lifelines, a coalition of groups led by highway construction companies and trucking firms, announced it would lobby for a $12.4 billion plan that was drafted by a task force Graves appointed last summer.

The task force's 8-year plan would require more than $4 billion in new revenue.

Graves' plan would issue $1.8 billion in new bonds and reissue $368 million in retired bonds in addition to the $900 million in bonds the state issued for its 1989 Comprehensive Highway Program.

Nurse charged after camera captures assault on child

BERGENFIELD, N.J. — A couple who installed a video camera so they could watch over their disabled 3-year-old daughter from their bedroom captured a nurse smacking, pinching and manhandling the child, police said.

The child's parents watched the tape, then called police, who on Tuesday arrested Neonita Sabate, a 42-year-old registered nurse, on charges of assault and child endangerment.

"I'm traumatized," the girl's mother, whose name was not released, said in Thursday's Record of Hackensack. "I don't trust anyone anymore."

The child has a rare chromosome disorder, and her breathing and heartbeat have to be monitored around the clock. The parents bought the video system so they could watch her on a monitor in their bedroom.

The camera was mounted in a corner and wasn't hidden, police said, but the nurse apparently didn't see it.

"I didn't buy it to watch the nurses," the girl's mother said. "I trusted all of my nurses, especially this one, who had been with me more than a year."

The tape also showed the nurse pulling the girl's hair and placing her hand and a washcloth over the child's mouth to stop her from crying. At one point, the girl's mother said, the tape shows the nurse picking the girl up and dropping her in the crib "like a sack of potatoes."

Attempts to reach Sabate on Thursday were unsuccessful.

Researchers' nasal spray speeds delivery of Viagra

LEXINGTON, Ky. — For men who just can't wait an hour for their Viagra to take effect, two researchers think they have the answer: a nasal spray delivery system.

Lewis Dittert and Anwar Hussein of the University of Kentucky's College of Pharmacy said they've created the first soluble version of Viagra's active ingredient, sildenafil.

They said the spray could allow Viagra to be absorbed directly into the bloodstream, offering a quicker hit — 10 to 15 minutes — with a lower dose than the anti-impotency pills on the market now. Those pills, whose active ingredient is not very water-soluble, can take up to an hour or more to take effect.

There's one catch: Dittert and Hussein cannot market their idea without permission from Pfizer Inc., which owns all rights to Viagra and sildenafil.

"We're not trying to steal their compound," Dittert told the Lexington Herald-Leader in Thursday's editions. "We want to help them make a better product."

The researchers would like to collaborate with Pfizer in marketing the spray, but Pfizer said it isn't interested, according to the newspaper.

Two wounded after shooting in Utah television station

SALT LAKE CITY — A woman carrying a grocery bag filled with bullets entered a television studio lobby Thursday afternoon and opened fire. At least two people were wounded, one critically, according to hospital personnel.

Police Sgt. Craig Gleason said people were injured when the shooting began at about 3:15 p.m. at the KSL television and radio studios.

Video West technical operator Dan Nestel said he saw a woman wearing a light-colored parka, a hat and shooting-range ear protection enter the KSL lobby and demand to speak to a reporter.

When her request was denied, Nestel said, she began firing random shots in the lobby. KSL radio employee Mary Karmmeyer entered the lobby after hearing shots and was confronted by the woman.

"She was saying, 'Newsroom, newsroom, where's the newsroom?'" Karmmeyer said.

The woman eventually made her way to the fourth floor, where Gleason said she was apprehended. Her condition wasn't immediately known.

LDS Hospital spokesman Jess Gomez said two victims were taken from the scene. One was transported to LDS and another to University Hospital.

"We received a 30-year-old female who is presently listed in extremely critical condition with a gunshot wound to the side of the head," Gomez said.

University of Utah Medical Center spokesman John Dwan said a man admitted to his hospital was not seriously injured. He is under observation.

KSL is Salt Lake City's NBC affiliate and is owned by the Mormon Church.

POSTAL WOES

STEVEN DEARINGER/KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lines formed at the U.S. Post Office at Fifth and Leavenworth streets Wednesday afternoon. Some customers were waiting to buy 1-cent stamps. The price of mailing a first-class letter raised to 33 cents on Sunday.

Rush for stamps follows postal change

By GINNY WRIGHT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students and citizens muttered under their breath in desperation as they waited in line for as long as 30 minutes at the Manhattan Post Office on Thursday.

Tellers, meanwhile, stood behind the counter looking tired after hours of lines that stretched all the way to the door.

The post office has been a nightmare for most of the week, Ken Olsen, superintendent of customer services, said.

The big fuss is over a penny. More precisely, it has been over a penny increase in first-class postal rates.

"I don't like it," Danielle Jones, sophomore in open-option, said. "I have to go and buy five one-cent stamps (because) they don't sell them separately in the machines."

The trouble started Monday, when the price of first-class postage was raised from 32 cents to 33 cents. When the post offices opened Monday morning they were confronted by people wanting to buy one-cent stamps so they could use their old stamps.

"The Postal Service is trying to break even while holding its rates down," Olsen said. "The cost is still less than the rate of inflation."

When the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970 was installed, it shifted the power to raise rates from Congress to the Postal Service Board of Governors and the Postal Rate Commission. Both of these organizations are presidentially appointed groups.

"Even though there has been a profit in the last two years, we have to make up for the 20-year deficit," Olsen said.

The Manhattan Post Office has gone through 100,000 one-cent stamps this week and is expecting a shipment of 50,000 more today to fill the requests of those trying to use up their old stamps.

— KEN OLSEN
SUPERINTENDENT OF

"It's a major inconvenience," Melynda Stein, sophomore in marketing, said.

Stein suggested that the postal services let people use their old stamps without supplemental one-cent stamps for a designated period of adjustment.

The reason for the small raise in rates was simple, Olsen said. "We do not get any tax dollars," he said.

Although the one-cent stamps are available in machines in the K-State Student Union, the Dykstra Hall post office and postal stations throughout Manhattan, most sell them only in books of fifty.

While this transition period is taking place to integrate the new stamps into our postal system fully, postal workers are asking for patience and understanding as tension builds on both sides of the line.

For more information on the stamp rate increase, contact your local post office or the United States Postal Service Web site at www.usps.com.

Manhattan group focuses on future of city planning

Sustainable Manhattan invites citizens to join discussion of community

By MIKE WATSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Meeting citizens' current needs while planning for their futures is the key to city planning, Manhattan leaders said in a roundtable discussion Thursday night.

The group Sustainable Manhattan invited citizens with mutual interests to its second panel discussion to discuss long- and short-term goals Thursday.

City Commissioner Bruce Snead said the group's purpose is to serve as a catalyst in moving the Manhattan-area community toward adopting changes that foster long-term economic, social and environmental sustainability. Snead moderated Thursday's discussion.

The importance of sustainability is to keep the city going over the long haul, Snead said. A sustained community is an expansion of the Golden Rule, maintaining the needs of today while considering the needs for future generations.

Panel members examined the imbalanced ratio of economic, social and environmental aspects of the community.

Jan Garton, a member of the Northern Flint Hills Audubon Society, said the problem is a three-legged stool with one leg longer than the other two.

While members of the community look into the economic stability in Manhattan, less priority is given to the social and environmental features.

"If you look at the community, we are a community of imports," she said. "Everything comes from somewhere else."

To keep the community healthy, she said it must look elsewhere. The common standpoint is that there is no time to work on the environment because it hurts the economy. Garton said this ratio should be balanced and work should be done to achieve environmental funding.

Concerned with Manhattan's social issues, Social Services Advisory Board member and panelist Atina Hanna gave her idea for a better Manhattan.

"Manhattan should be a place to find a secure, full-time job that earns enough for me to provide my family with the basic human needs of food, shelter and health care," Hanna said.

She said to reduce poverty, jobs should be promoted that match skills with existing residents and address families that are moving off welfare. The community also should have affordable child care and transportation, she said.

"Because human resources are so valuable in the information age, education should be provided for all," Hanna said.

To acquire a sustainable community, Dan Colantone, president of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said the community must strive to be better by improving education, offering a wide range of employment and using all levels of government efficiently.

"I don't believe any of us want to remain status quo," he said. "We're all community partners, and we're in this together."

Another question discussed was the topic of an optimum size of Manhattan.

"I don't think I want to think about this community by size," Peak said. "I've been in many small communities that I hope we never become. I think we get hung up on stereotypes that large size brings negative connotations. Stay away from stereotypes. They examine topics too quickly."

Although some residents said they're comfortable with their community, some still find growth and changes uncomfortable.

"I don't feel safe walking at night," Manhattan resident Stan Elsea said. "I think we should challenge Manhattan to grow inward and fix up areas that need work instead of covering up farm ground and the Flint Hills. I think sometimes the almighty dollar gets in the way."

"MANHATTAN SHOULD BE A PLACE TO FIND A SECURE, FULL-TIME JOB THAT EARNS ENOUGH FOR ME TO PROVIDE MY FAMILY WITH THE BASIC HUMAN NEEDS OF FOOD, SHELTER, AND HEALTH CARE."

Graves' budget policy helps, hurts education

In Gov. Bill Graves' State of the State address Tuesday, he made it clear to Kansans how important K-12 education was to him. "The education of our children continues to be the first priority of Kansans," he said. "Education opens the door to their future. For some it is where dreams are given a chance to become reality."

The frustrating aspect of the governor's proposed budget, however, is how little emphasis was paid to higher education — specifically faculty salaries. Faculty members will receive only a 4.7-percent increase in salaries — a far cry from the 7.6 percent increase that was requested.

For being such a priority, higher education in Kansas is truly getting snubbed. K-State is far behind peer institutions when it comes to faculty salaries, and with such a small increase, the university is unlikely to gain any ground. Higher salaries make it easier for universities to recruit and retain faculty members, and it also shows the nation just how high a priority education is in Kansas.

Sure, Graves proposed an $86.7 million increase in K-12 spending, and while the state's excellent K-12 program should never be neglected, the proposed budget is putting emphasis on a healthy program while neglecting one that is in distress. A smaller increase in K-12 spending would do wonders for faculty salaries at the university level.

But there are other avenues to help pay for faculty salaries. Graves was quick to act on his campaign promise to eliminate vehicle property taxes, which would be eliminated over the next four years in his proposed budget. A more moderate elimination of vehicle taxes would make way for funding beleaguered faculty.

No one will deny that taxpayers spend plenty of money on higher education, but for each state dollar spent, the state gets more money back through job training and research. K-State is one of the most efficient cost centers in the state. In order to ensure that the state continues to benefit from higher education, faculty salaries must be increased to a reasonable level.

Obtaining adequate faculty salaries is not a dead issue, although it is visibly dying. There is a chance that the Kansas Legislature still can adjust the budget to make an increase in salaries. K-State administrators already are gearing up for such a campaign, and constituents should contact their legislators before it's too late.

PUNISHMENT FIT FOR A King

Wins and losses in political game lead to sore tush

If there can be one important lesson to be taken home from this whole mess revolving around the Clinton scandal and all its participants, it's that you don't always want what you get when you get what you want.

First, take President Clinton. He got to live out nearly every 51-year-old male's fantasy by getting his "little Beavis" touched by a 22-year-old woman. What does Clinton have to show for it? Mounting legal bills, getting impeached, becoming nationally humiliated when his choice of humors became public knowledge, and the wrath of Hillary (although I suspect that the reason the first lady hasn't ditched the president is that she was into it, too. Maybe the president wasn't lying when he said there was always someone looking through the peephole into the Oval Office).

Monica Lewinsky got to live out every sexually active 22-year-old female's fantasy by getting to touch the "little Beavis" of the most powerful man in the world. Henry Kissinger once said that power is the greatest aphrodisiac. What does Lewinsky have to show for it? Mounting legal bills, getting backstabbed by her "best friend," being harassed by Kenneth Starr and the news media, and the knowledge that to now be with any other man of lesser power will be taking a step backward (unless she can somehow finagle an internship with Bill Gates). In addition, adding to the weight on her conscience (true Lewinsky quote), she feels badly "that so much attention was brought to (her apartment) building," the Watergate. (I don't know how Bob and Elizabeth Dole can stand to live there anymore.)

Linda Tripp, in her attempt to get the president in trouble and a million-dollar book deal, was successful in obtaining the original evidence that got Clinton in trouble. For all her efforts, primary among her troubles are her mounting legal bills. You see, it's illegal in the state of Maryland to tape another person secretly unless the person being taped secretly knows that they are, in fact, being taped secretly. (Her legal bills are so high that she now is soliciting money publicly for her defense fund. She said that if the president can solicit money for his legal defense, why can't she? What Tripp forgets is that the president's approval rating is 73 percent, and that everybody hates her.) Moreover, Tripp also receives the reputation of being the backstabbing shrew that she truly is. This just goes to show you that ugly is sometimes more than skin deep; sometimes it goes clear to the bone. Raja Mishra (the national reporter at Knight-Ridder) pointed out that Tripp's unpopularity is so great that even the conservatives are distancing themselves from her. Tripp is so untouchable that she is not being considered as a possible witness for the Senate trial.

Kenneth Starr: After spending many, many years and scores of millions of dollars trying to find even the smallest infraction the president might have committed from Whitewater, to Travelgate, to illegal campaign contributions, to the Vince Foster suicide, Starr finally gets some evidence that Clinton probably committed perjury and might have obstructed justice in relation to a dismissed civil suit. What does Starr get for all his troubles? A reputation of being some sort of puritanical character worthy of a Nathaniel Hawthorne story.

The Republican Party: With the level of destructive partisan politics at an all-time high, the party of Lincoln tries with all its might to discredit, humiliate, and politically destroy Clinton by making public the Ken Starr Report (I, for one, am glad to have read all those naughty bits about the president), releasing Clinton's videotaped deposition (which gave America the new phrase "it depends on what 'is' is"), releasing the Tripp tapes, going for impeachment in the House of Representatives, not entertaining the idea of censure because it knew that it could get the impeachment, and finally getting Clinton impeached. For their efforts, the Republicans lose representation in Congress, Newt Gingrich loses his speakership, Gingrich's designated replacement Bob Livingston feels forced to resign for past indiscretions, and the country as a whole (or at least the few Americans that care) feels as if this whole mess is a GOP attempt at a coup d'état, thus resulting in the President's 73-percent approval rating.

So what is the logical outcome of all this? If the Republicans are successful in removing Clinton from office, Clinton's approval rating will shoot up to 120 or 130 percent, and most of America will completely hate the GOP, thus voting them all out of office in the 2000 elections. In addition, an even more liberal Al Gore will be our president, leading the United States into the new millennium with an overwhelmingly Democratic Congress (and don't think the Republicans in the Senate aren't aware of this). On the other hand, if Clinton is successful in fending off impeachment, he is left weak and beaten up, yet still our leader. A censure most surely will follow (i.e., a kind of national slap on the wrist), thus leaving everybody a bit unsatisfied, especially after all the preceding pomp.

Because neither presidential removal nor wrist-slapping is a satisfactory outcome to this situation, the one remaining path to follow is a national spanking. Clinton should be made to stand before a joint session of Congress, pull down his pants, bend over the knee of Chief Justice William Rehnquist and have every senator and representative go up in procession and give the president a swat upon his popo. (There is historical precedent for this: In 1174, King Henry II subjected himself to a flogging of more than 80 stripes as a form of penance for his association in the murder of Thomas Becket, the Archbishop of Canterbury.)

Immediately following this disciplinary ceremony and in light of the fact that our other national representatives have wasted the last two years accomplishing absolutely nothing except for changing the name of the national airport from that of a great president, George Washington, to that of a lesser president, Ronald Reagan, all senators and representatives must drop their trousers and run through the Capitol giving each other spankings (freshman legislators are excluded, but are made to watch as a forewarning).

After an appropriate amount of time, all the national legislators must meet in the rotunda of the Capitol with their pants still around their ankles, and, in the spirit of bipartisan reconciliation, give each other a great big group hug while proclaiming, "I love you, man."

If nothing else, it will make for some interesting viewing on C-SPAN.

Communication key to prevent misunderstanding

JONATHAN KURCHE

"It's like 95 percent white, greek, rich kids." So said Tammy Goodson, president of the Native American Student Body, when asked what kind of environment K-State had for multicultural students.

There's no question that K-State faces some challenges to become more multicultural. Of the 20,885 students who attended K-State this fall, 18,218 are Caucasian. That means that the entire gamut of other races and cultures — from international students to blacks, from Asian-Americans to Native Americans, from Hispanic Americans to people who fit the "other" category — all of that diversity is squashed into a group of around 2,500 people.

Add the members of the bisexual, gay, and lesbian community, who come from all of the above-mentioned ethnic groups and still are not recognized by the university as being a unique, multicultural organization, and the picture you paint does seem rather monochromatic.

Naturally, not all K-State students are rich. Not all K-State students are greek, either, and being neither greek nor rich doesn't necessarily make you a bad person. However, the evidence of such stereotypes should be a warning light to our student body: It demonstrates clearly that our flaw isn't just about one ethnic group failing to understand another, it's about all groups failing to understand each other.

Believing that this problem might stem from a lack of communication and knowing that communication is the business of this newspaper, I sat down last semester with a few students to talk about multicultural issues.

It instantly was apparent that none of us felt as though our needs were being met.

"I just want, like, knowledge of us out there. We're here, there's nothing to be afraid of, we don't bite," said Emmilyn Sarsozo, member of the Asian American Student Union and a multicultural student ambassador. She travels to high schools across Kansas and talks about being an Asian-American student at K-State.

"I just want to be walking down the street one of these days and have somebody look up at me and go, 'OK,' and then, you know, just walk on. It's better than being stared, and stared, and stared at," Sarsozo said.

Katherine Young, who is a member of Immersion, a spinoff group from the American Ethnic Studies Student Association, said, "I've never been stared, and stared, and stared, and stared at."

With her distinct lineage, Young speaks with a multitude of ethnic voices.

"Only when I wear my do-rag, and the only reason I wear a do-rag is because I'm too lazy to fix my hair," she said. "I'm not in a gang ... that's the only time I probably get stared at."

But, she said she feels that K-State students have trouble understanding each other's differences.

"A lot of people were raised that we're all the same inside, and they don't realize that our different experiences have brought us up differently," she said. "Guess what, I'm not the same as everyone else. I'm not the same inside, and I think so many people that go to this school, that's what they were raised like, and when people say anything different, or anything that goes against that, you know, they just get scared, and then they back off."

The truth, however, is that our most prominent differences are on the outside — reflective of how we dress, or how we do our hair, or how we act, or what our skin color might be. We like to feel ostracized, isolated and alone, but at the heart of the matter, humans all have similar hopes, dreams and desires.

Sometimes, that can be frightening. It's easy to condemn someone or something before you know and understand them, but to see that Mr. Hyde is really Dr. Jekyll at heart forces you to confront your own monsters.

Goodson said she feels that if students are not committed to making themselves more multicultural, then we will not make any progress.

"They don't understand, then they're not going to try to learn because they don't want to," she said. "It's something that you in yourself have to want to learn about other people, and not just be so self-absorbed in your own little world there, that you don't know what's going on in the rest of the world."

We all need to challenge ourselves to expand our point of view until it covers the globe. This is college — we are supposed to learn about new things, think about new things and feel new emotions about the new things we think about. How can we do that if we never try anything new?

"We're here, we've always been here, and we're still going to be here, you know, we're not going anywhere," Goodson said. "If people don't wonder what the other cultures are doing, or try to learn what the other cultures are doing, then nothing's going to change."

We all need to take responsibility for improving the way we interact with each other. In order to do that, we need to take responsibility for our own multicultural education.

So the Collegian is going to try to do what's right — to report on stories that inform and challenge all of us to take a deeper look into ourselves. With luck and patience we will all be better for it, and as Young said, "You will just be better able to understand where people are coming from."

Simplifying goals makes daily life more satisfying

Hey, you. Yeah, you, the one who always sets goals at the beginning of the semester with no hope of reaching them. You know who I'm talking to, Mr. "I'm not going to miss any classes" and Miss "I'm going to exercise every day." It's OK. I'm one too, but this semester it's going to be different.

You see, this is my last semester on the K-State campus (thank you, thank you very much — I am going to graduate), and I've decided that as a reward for actually being able to graduate I'm going to treat myself to a dose of reality. No more idealistic goals that only make me feel like a complete bum at the end of every semester. No, I'm going to set goals that are so low that I'll feel like the queen that I am this May.

My goals in the past have looked something like this:

1. Don't miss any classes.
2. Go to bed before midnight.
3. Eat three healthy meals a day.
4. Act selflessly.
5. Don't procrastinate.
6. Stay abreast of local, national and international affairs.
7. Don't drink alcohol (All of you who know me, you can quit laughing now).
8. Study arduously for my exams and finals.
9. Exercise every day.
10. Find a boyfriend.

So let me repeat my parenthetical comment in No. 7 — all of you who actually know me probably are laughing right now because you know how many of them I actually accomplish. Well, laugh no more, my friends, because today all of that changes. No more idealism. I'm facing reality, and I'm going to feel like I've accomplished something this semester. So here are my new and improved goals:

1. Miss fewer than five classes a course per month.
2. Go to bed before 3 a.m. at least twice a month.
3. Remember to eat breakfast, lunch OR dinner.
4. Don't get killed by the psycho-hose-beast-bicyclists on campus.
5. Go to my 8:30 class and stay awake through at least half of the lecture.
6. Don't lock myself out of my house or car for a whole week.
7. Drink fewer than five beers on Friday night and fewer than six on Saturday night.
8. Don't sleep through my exams and finals.
9. Celebrate the Roman holiday Saturnalia year-round. (For those of you who don't know what that is, look it up. I guarantee you'll want to celebrate with me.)
10. Find a date to parties.

These are my goals, simple and true. Join me, one and all, on my crusade to stop optimism by facing reality.

I guarantee you'll feel like a new person come May.

LIBRARY

traditionally lagged behind other schools.

"We've always spent less on books and journals than our peers," Hobrock said. "It's always been a concern at K-State."

The situation is so extreme that K-State's recognized debate team travels to KU several times a semester to use their library facilities.

"It is true that the debate team goes to KU and checks out hundreds of books," he said. "They are tickled to death at KU about that."

Hobrock said both KU and K-State spend about the same amount of money on scholarly journals, but KU spends more on books, specifically on books that focus on the humanities.

Susan Stanfield, the debate team's coach, said that was the reason the team has to travel to Lawrence from time to time.

"It really hurts," Stanfield said. "Even on non-legal topics, the fact that there is no law library is a problem."

Hobrock said he plans to focus any new student fees on purchasing books that will be useful to the typical student, rather than scholarly journals that are used more by faculty members.

Another source of possible revenue Hobrock was hoping for was from the Kansas Legislature. The library was hoping to get 1 percent of the university's operating costs in the governor's budget, but it received only the same 0.5 percent it received last year.

Hobrock said this was burdensome for other departments, because they are forced to cover the difference.

"The health of the university's budget is paramount," Hobrock said. "This places a real burden on other parts of campus."

The library could gain some additional funds by way of something called indirect overhead.

When someone receives a grant, they often receive additional funds to cover indirect overhead. At this time, the library does not receive any of this money, but that could change. Hobrock said some of it might be allocated to the library next year, which could amount to an additional $250,000.

Should that happen, Hobrock said the vast majority of that money would be invested in scholarly journals, since grants are received to fund research, and research can't be done without these scholarly journals.

"We're trying to give everyone what they pay for," Hobrock said.

To do that, he said he plans to spend money on the people who provide the money.

The KSU Foundation also provides a large portion of Hale's funds, although no exact amount can be given, because it depends somewhat on the stock market.

Both Hobrock and Foundation Vice President of Investments David Weaver said they agree a fair projection is somewhere in the neighborhood of $250,000, although they both said it was stantal and circumstantial," he said. "We look forward to presenting our defense based on the facts, the law and the Constitution."

Senators sat attentively at their desks throughout the day, but there was no indication that any of the evidence had shaken the support Clinton has among Democrats.

"Frankly, I don't think there was anything new from any of the House" speakers, said one, Sen. Byron Dorgan of North Dakota.

Clinton stands accused of perjury and obstruction of justice for attempting to conceal his affair with Lewinsky, the former White House intern.

He has admitted to an improper relationship, but he and his lawyers maintain that the charges, even if proven, do not rise to the level of impeachable offenses.

His trial is expected to last at least two more weeks — far longer if the Senate agrees to the House's demand to call witnesses and if the White House's follow-up request for a long delay to prepare is approved.

The prosecutors repeatedly used the word "conspiracy" to describe Clinton's efforts to thwart court proceedings against him, making the argument that senators should hear from witnesses, Monica Lewinsky, presidential friend Vernon Jordan and Oval Office Secretary Betty Currie among them.

White House spokesman James Kennedy attacked the Republican case even as it continued. It is "both unsub-impossible to know for sure.

Until he knows exactly how much money the library will receive from each of these sources, Hobrock said he will continue to try to make ends meet.

"Without the funding we want, we're reduced to our wits," Hobrock said. "We're forced to try to put together pieces that add up."

Calvin Emig, owner of Anderson

Village, said he was concerned about the entrances to Anderson Village. At one time during construction, both entrances were blocked and it was impossible to get into the parking lot.

"I'm very concerned about that happening again," he said. "As the owner, I don't feel I can tolerate that for any permanent period of time."

Norton said both entrances would not be blocked simultaneously again.

Anderson will never be completely closed off to traffic. Moorman said there will be at least two lanes of traffic open throughout the construction process.

session until after dark as a string of House Republicans laid out their evidence.

They buttressed their presentation with numerous images of Clinton on videotape, many of them of his testimony before Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr's grand jury.

"It depends upon what the meaning of the word 'is' is," Clinton was seen to say in one snippet, a now-famous utterance that his critics have seized on as evidence of legal hairsplitting — or worse.

The prosecutors repeatedly used the word "conspiracy" to describe Clinton's efforts to thwart court proceedings against him, making the argument that senators should hear from witnesses, Monica Lewinsky, presidential friend Vernon Jordan and Oval Office Secretary Betty Currie among them.

White House spokesman James Kennedy attacked the Republican case even as it continued. It is "both unsub-

Wildcats look for leadership against Longhorns

By JOSHUA KINDER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Wildcats will try to improve from Wednesday night's performance against Nebraska when they take on the Texas Longhorns on Saturday in Austin, Texas.

The Longhorns come into the matchup with an 8-8 overall record and an undefeated mark of 4-0 in Big 12 Conference play, while the Cats, who have struggled of late, bring in a 12-5 overall record and a 1-3 conference record.

After the 70-61 loss to the Huskers,

6-foot 11-inch senior post-man Shawn Rhodes showed signs of disapproval when it came to the leadership on the team, something the Cats will need to beat Texas.

"We just don't have people who are stepping up in tough situations," Rhodes said. "I don't know what it is, but we just have to get a lot tougher. The main thing is that we've been playing soft."

"We need to toughen up and go out there and act like we want to win," he said.

K-State's long-range shooting was at a season low Wednesday night when it made just three of 16 three-point attempts.

Head coach Tom Asbury echoed Rhodes' concerns along with the issue of the Cats' three-point woes when he said the Nebraska performance was the worst of the season thus far.

"We knew exactly what they were doing," Asbury said of the Nebraska game Wednesday night. "We just didn't execute. We didn't step in with any mental toughness at all."

The Longhorns dropped five of their first six games to non-conference opponents, but are on a roll now, winning six of their last seven and four-straight conference games against Colorado, Iowa State, Nebraska and Baylor.

Three Longhorn players have been key to the Longhorn success, averaging in double figures for points scored.

Junior forward Nnabem Gabe Muoneke, who stands at 6 feet 7 inches, is averaging almost 17 points per game to lead Texas and just slightly over six rebounds per contest, which is third on the team.

Chris Clack, who led the Longhorns in scoring last season, returns for his senior year to help lead the Texas attack. Clack is averaging 15.6 points per game, while pulling down 7.1 rebounds per game.

The third of the Longhorn scoring trio is 7-foot sophomore center Chris Mihm. His inside dominance is important to the Longhorns because he leads the team in rebounds, with 8.6 per game, and blocks, with 40 on the season. Mihm averages just under 12 points per game as well.

K-State owns the series between the Longhorns at 6-1, dating back to 1971, with the Cats taking last year's contest 81-77 in Manhattan.

While K-State students were on holiday break, the Cats were busy on the hardwood. They went 4-2 over break with a 1-3 record in conference action. K-State defeated its three non-conference opponents, Missouri of KC 67-39, Coppin State 62-39 and St. Louis 67-63.

K-State's lone conference win came against the Texas Tech Red Raiders 82-63 on Jan. 9.

The Cats opened the conference season in Stillwater, Okla., on Jan. 2 against the 21st-ranked Oklahoma State Cowboys. The Cats eventually dropped it in overtime 75-69. Josh Reid poured in 21 points in the losing effort to lead K-State.

Missouri traveled to Manhattan on Jan. 6 to take on the Cats and was successful in defeating K-State 78-73, despite a second-half comeback attempt.

Texas to block Cats' ascension

By NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's basketball team has the opportunity to jump into the upper level of the Big 12 Conference this weekend.

The Wildcats take on 8-6 Texas on Saturday. Both teams are tied 2-2 in Big 12 play and are nestled within the Big 12 race at third place.

K-State head coach Deb Patterson said she is looking for her team to play hard for a full 40 minutes, something she said she didn't see in the last game.

"For the other 33 minutes of the game against Nebraska I was satisfied," Patterson said. "But those last seven stand out as not particularly good."

This weekend's game will be the only meeting between Texas and K-State this season, and the Cats will be looking for their second-straight conference victory.

The Cats are 9-5 on the season and are looking to continue their play from Wednesday night against Nebraska. The Cats shot the ball well during the game and held a traditionally strong rebounding team to only eight offensive rebounds.

K-State also shot 71 percent from the free-throw line and 60 percent from beyond the three-point line. Freshman guard Kristin Rethman was a big reason for the team's success from long range. Rethman was 5-6 Wednesday night and scored a season-high 22 points.

Rethman is beginning to get respect from players and coaches around the league.

"We knew coming in that she was a great shooter," Nicole Kubik, a Nebraska forward, said. "I was guarding her, and I left her open. You can't leave a shooter like that open."

The Longhorns have had trouble replacing its leading scorer from last year, Angela Jackson. Jackson averaged 17.6 points per game last season and also chipped in 6.8 rebounds per game.

Without Jackson's force in the middle, the Longhorns are led by forward Edwina Brown. Brown, a 5-foot 10-inch forward, is averaging 20 points per game in conference play.

Traditionally, the series has shown evidence of a bit of a home-court advantage. Since the two teams began playing each other in Big 12 play during the 1997 season, the home team has won every game. Last year the Longhorns defeated K-State 73-57 in Austin, Texas.

Texas leads the all-time series 5-1, and the game is set for 7 p.m. Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

Johnson stays put; he'll spend more time with family

By STEVEN WINE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAVIE, Fla. — Jimmy Johnson's voice cracked and his eyes welled with tears Thursday as he explained his flirtation with retirement by describing the worst loss of his life.

"When I went to mother's funeral, they had the viewing the day before, and I wasn't able to do that," Johnson said, pausing to compose himself.

The Dec. 20 death of his mother, his father's fight with cancer and his impending marriage had Johnson ready to quit as coach of the Miami Dolphins.

After a meeting with owner Wayne Huizenga, Johnson decided to delegate some of his duties by hiring former Chicago Bears coach Dave Wannstedt as assistant head coach.

"There are times when you pull back and say, be with the people you care about and don't shortchange them," Johnson said.

Johnson will return for a fourth season with Miami in 1999.

"My commitment is going to be the same as far as getting us to a championship," he told a hastily called news conference. "But I will try to spend a few more hours with my family."

The sequence of events began late Wednesday, when the news surfaced that Johnson planned to retire. Dolphins officials were braced for his departure when he arrived at work Thursday morning.

"I was not looking forward to being on the streets looking for a coach," team president Eddie Jones said.

K-State wide receiver Darnell McDonald stretches for the ball during the K-State vs. Oklahoma State football game at KSU Stadium. McDonald, who failed to pull the ball in, had one catch for 14 yards during the game.

ONE LAST hurrah

Wildcat standouts return to post-season gridiron to cement themselves as all-stars

For most of the K-State football team, it's time to shift gears.

With the season completed, the time has arrived to focus on classes, nurse injuries and begin training for next season. A few K-State seniors aren't so lucky, however. For them, the final gun of the Builders Square Alamo Bowl was just the beginning of a whole new world of pressure.

Beginning Saturday, K-State standouts Michael Bishop, Martin Gramatica, Travis Ochs, Gerald Neasman, Justin Swift, Jeff Kelly, Eric Hickson, Darnell McDonald and Ryan Young will be among the droves of collegiate gridiron hopefuls to take part in some of college football's annual postseason all-star games.

A week of workouts and practices under the supervision of professional and college coaches and scouts culminates in the all-star games, said Kent Brown, director of sports information. These games, he said, afford fans and scouts alike a chance to see how the best of college football's best stack up against each other.

"I think you look at it as a chance to show your skills in a situation with a lot of scouts, and against players of a like talent level," Brown said. "It's just a great chance to try and improve your stock when it comes to moving to the next level."

When players take the field for these games, Brown said some of them hold their NFL futures in their hands and spend about three hours trying madly not to drop them.

"You're kind of on your own at these things," Brown said. "For many of our guys it's a great chance to make that impression that could possibly help them further their career."

One player who has much at stake is former Wildcat star Bishop. Early projections have the Heisman Trophy runner-up being picked anywhere between the first and fourth rounds of the draft. ESPN draft expert Mel Kiper Jr. has Bishop rated as a fourth-round pick and not among his top-10 quarterbacks.

In addition to giving the players a chance to strut their stuff, the all-star games have some benefits for the schools involved as well. K-State's impressive all-star contingent this year could yield hidden benefits for the school and the football program as a whole, Brown said.

"I think obviously it shows people around the country that if there are nine players playing in all-star games, then there are a lot of quality players at KSU," Brown said.

"It certainly never hurts to have the Powercat logo and helmet visible on television when it comes to recruiting," he said.

Winter sports advisory in effect for disappointed, dejected patrons of athletic teams

VIEWPOINT

NEFF

If you are like me, the sporting events over winter break were fairly traumatizing. The bowl game, the end of the Chiefs' season, the NBA lockout, Jordan retiring, etc. Hey, buck up. A new semester is under way and there are a lot of exciting sporting events heading our way soon. If you are a betting man or woman, you might find this column to be rather helpful.

Now, gazing deep into the Neff Crystal Ball of Sporting Wonder, we'll take a look at how things will pan out.

The Super Bowl will pit the Atlanta Falcons against the Denver Broncos. Don't ask me how the Falcons will beat the Vikings, but a man can dream, can't he? Anyway, it will be a close game until the Denver offensive line, following an increasingly popular professional wrestling trend, will turn on John Elway and help the Falcons.

This will turn the tide of the game until Jamal Anderson is knocked out when Bill Romanowski runs onto the field with a steel chair while the refs aren't looking. Final score: Broncos 21, Falcons 20.

The baseball season will begin with me once again devoting my undying admiration for the Royals in hopes that George Brett's recent induction into the Hall of Fame might somehow inspire them to once again play championship baseball.

So, simply to spite me, the Royals will be selecting their starting pitcher from a raffle the day before the game. To purchase a raffle ticket, all you have to do is call the Royals hotline.

Staying on baseball, fans will grow weary of noncompetitive games, so the commissioner will pass a law stating that when a team with a payroll of more than two times that of their opposing team, its members must play with refrigerators strapped to their back.

Along the same lines, any player who gets paid more than the entire opposing team (Kevin Brown gets $105 million over the next 7 years) will have to play blindfolded while being chased by rabid dogs. Where can I get tickets?

Mike Tyson makes his big comeback, again, and will fight some guy named Francois Botha. Iron Mike better not lose to some guy named Francois. Guess what, though? Botha will be victorious, if Tyson trips over the ropes and breaks his neck.

The new rule passed regulating the size of professional volleyball uniforms (the maximum length on the sides is 2.5 inches) will create an incredible demand for season tickets. Strangely enough, all the ticket holders will be male. Then, following an NBA trend, the volleyball players will go on strike for more revenue sharing.

Roller derby is coming back. Any guesses to how long that will last?

Marty Schottenheimer will sign on to coach the Miami Dolphins, and Jimmy Johnson will sign on to coach the Kansas City Chiefs. It will be all for naught because Elway will never retire as long as I live just to torment me. Oh, and the Broncos again will smack down my beloved Chiefs.

Thus begins the semester of Michael Neff, sports columnist. If I am right on any of these, I'm destined for greatness, huge lottery winnings, a marriage to Kathy Ireland, and a career with the Psychic Friends Network. Ahh, the life every man dreams of.

Art at a Glance

Faculty members' work fills Union art gallery

By JUSTIN VANNEST
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Faculty members from the Department of Art have displayed their works in various places on campus, for longer than most can remember.

"I have been here for 34 years," Renata Replegle, professor of art, said. "Every year since then, we have had an art show to showcase the art faculty."

This semester, the K-State Student Union art gallery is being used to bring attention to faculty members work.

"This is an opportunity to showcase the department and to raise the level of awareness of students about art," Replegle said.

"We do this every year," James Munce, professor of art, said. "The faculty are both artists and teachers, so we regularly show our work as a group and as individuals."

Almost every member of the art department is represented in the show. Faculty members are not required to submit works for the show.

"There is no demand that faculty show their art," Munce said, "but almost everybody does."

Each of the pieces represent the different styles in which the faculty members specialize.

Replegle's "Tail Spin" is a mixed-media work.

"This is the smallest in a series of works I have been working on over the past year," Replegle said.

The works range from about six inches in diameter to more than 1.5 feet.

"There is a lot of symbolic imagery in my work," Replegle said. "I have about 12 pieces now and others in progress."

On display by Anna Holcombe, head of the art department, is "Still Lifebox VIV."

"It is two vase forms on a box," Holcombe said. "The fact that it can open is very important to me."

"I do a lot of still-life imagery. There is a relationship with the items, and I try and personify them."

Munce's work, "Variations on a Theme," actually is a series of 11 different pieces. The pieces are intaglio prints which, Munce said, "is nothing more than a fancy word for etching."

"I usually do larger more complex works," Munce said. "In fact, I just finished a much larger work over the summer." This showing is not the only opportunity faculty members have to display their works. The show has alternated locations since the opening of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art in 1996.

"We alternate the show every other year at the Beach Museum," Munce said. "And every fall, we show work at the Colombian Theater in Wamego."

The department also arranges for swaps with other universities to display their pieces.

Ultimately, Replegle said, the main purpose of the art displays is to benefit the student body.

"We do this to provide art for the students," Replegle said.

The show will run until Jan. 29 in the Union art gallery.

New season at McCain showcases variety, notoriety

■ "Schoolhouse Rock," Sondheim's "Forum" part of diverse spring series.

By NAOMI MCHUGH
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This semester, McCain Auditorium has a lineup of 11 shows, beginning with the Russian National Ballet's performance of Tchaikovsky's century-old ballet "Swan Lake" at 7:30 p.m. Jan. 28.

One of the shows expected to be popular is "The Chieftains." This band brings Ireland's rich musical history to the 20th century. "The Chieftains" will perform at 7 p.m. April 25.

Kristin Brighton, communications director for McCain, said it was not easy to get this group to play at K-State.

"I've had people come up to me and ask, 'How in the world did you get 'The Chieftains' to play in Manhattan?'" Brighton said.

The remainder of the McCain season includes a variety of plays, such as "Halley's Comet," which is written by and starring John Amos, of "Good Times," "Roots" and "Coming to America." It chronicles the life of an 87-year-old man who shares his tales of seeing the Halley's comet as a young boy. This show will be at 8 p.m. Feb. 5.

The well-known comedy "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," with music and lyrics by Stephen Sondheim which is based on a book by Burt Shevelove and Larry Gelbart, will be at 7:30 p.m. Feb. 18. This show tells about the origin of theater and contains adult themes.

For music lovers, two days after "Swan Lake," Christoph Pregardien, tenor, will be performing a solo concert that will include songs by Schumann and Beethoven. Pregardien, who received a Grammy nomination in 1996 for his recording of "Don Giovanni," will be performing at McCain at 8 p.m. Jan. 30.

This season, Brighton said, McCain also features shows for audiences of all ages. At 3 p.m. on Feb. 7, the ludicrous and impossible acts of Tomás Kubinek will hit the stage at McCain. Kubinek is known for his ability to make people of all ages laugh.

Shakespeare meets his match in new romantic comedy

By CORBIN H. CRABLE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The release of "Shakespeare in Love," a romantic comedy from director John Madden, is sure to spark a renewed interest in Shakespearean literature.

The movie, which opened Christmas Day, is set in London in 1593 with William Shakespeare (Joseph Fiennes) facing an author's greatest fear: writer's block.

Shakespeare is in the initial stages of penning his latest work, "Romeo and Ethel, the Pirate's Daughter," when he meets Viola De Lesseppe (Gwyneth Paltrow), a strikingly beautiful noblewoman with her heart set on becoming an actress. This dream has little chance of becoming a reality because Viola lives in a time in which women are forbidden to act onstage and young boys play the roles of females.

Viola goes incognito as a boy, Thomas Kent, and lands the lead role in Shakespeare's "Romeo." Inspired by Viola, Shakespeare breathes life into his production, which will become his best-known play, "Romeo and Juliet." A love affair with Viola ends on a surprising note.

With a colorful cast of supporting characters in lavish costumes, such as Ben Affleck's Ned Alleyn (a pompous actor and director) and Judi Dench's Queen Elizabeth I, the movie proves to be a treat for the eyes. The Shakespearean dialogue adds to the magic of this Renaissance treasure. Even Paltrow, surprisingly enough, sounds believable with her British accent, and plays off Fiennes' Shakespeare quite well.

The most convincing acting comes from Dench, already a well-known Shakespearean actress from her roles in plays such as the Royal Shakespeare Company's production of "The Twelfth Night." Dench brought an air of experience that helped this cast of fairly new actors.

One of the only negative aspects of this movie is that it is only people with art houses in their area will be able to enjoy the romance and wit that only William Shakespeare could provide.

Higher education group submits plan to Graves

■ Proposed structure would create two bodies to govern Kansas colleges.

By LEW FERGUSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Governor's Task Force on Higher Education Structure for Excellence submitted its recommendations for Kansas Board of Regents restructuring to the governor today at his regular press conference.

Under the plan advanced by the task force, which has yet to be submitted in bill form to the Legislature, two new governing bodies would be created:

■ A seven-member higher education coordinating council for strategic planning, data collection and unified budget analysis for all public higher education.

■ A nine-member board of trustees to do planning, set policy and resolve problems for the state's 19 community colleges.

President Jon Wefald, one of two regents representatives to the task force, said the task force recommendations are a step towards higher education reorganization in Kansas.

"As the report is now written it is a very good report, and one that would safeguard, and at the same time allow us to solve problems — let's say if there was a dispute between a community college and a regents school," Wefald said.

The regents were reluctant to support the plan, however, stating that they did not want to back it prematurely — it still has yet to be approved.

"I'm anxious to see what the governor and Legislature do with it," said Regent Ken Havner of Hays, who also served on the task force.

"There are a lot of good things for us to talk about in this proposal ... I am cautiously supportive of it," Havner said. "On the other hand, there are some downsides. But if we weigh the positive aspects ... we see some real positives coming out of this."

Wefald said he agreed with Havner, but with the caveat:

"If the Legislature makes substantive changes we might think differently about this proposal. There will be plenty of time to decide whether to support it," he said.

Adding the two boards could be the plan's biggest downside, Havner said, because of the additional bureaucracy and cost.

"It could be an expensive venture," he said. "On the other hand, it could be done on a minimal number of dollars."

Regent Harry Craig of Topeka expressed concern about the new boards, saying they could cost too much and burden the universities with another layer of bureaucracy.

"This sucker is not something I could favor on a good day," Craig said.

"We need to increase the financial support of our faculty, and if this is going to cost a lot of money, I can't support it. In concept, I think it's got some good positives," he said.

Regents Chairman Bill Docking of Arkansas City said he thought the board should "hold our powder dry" until specifics of the plan are known and what changes develop during the legislative process.

"There will be ample opportunity for us to make comment as the process moves along," he said.

Wefald, however, was optimistic, stating that 17 of the 19 task force members had approved of the plan, and that the early buzz about the recommendations seemed optimistic.

"Right now as it's written, we would say it's a very good proposition," he said.

U.S. counters French proposal

By NICOLE WINFIELD
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — The United States countered French calls to lift the oil embargo on Iraq with a proposal Thursday to let Baghdad sell unlimited amounts of oil — but only if the proceeds go to buy food and other humanitarian supplies for Iraqis.

Deputy U.S. Ambassador Peter Burleigh outlined the proposal before the Security Council, expressing concern that the 8-year-old embargo has caused immense suffering in Iraq but stressing that Iraqi President Saddam Hussein's regime itself was mostly to blame.

As evidence, Burleigh pointed to Iraq's failure to submit contracts for humanitarian goods, to reports that Iraq actually was exporting grain rather than selling it domestically and to Iraq's own acknowledgments that it cannot effectively distribute some imported medicines.

"The basic problem continues to be the government of Iraq's unwillingness to manage this oil-for-food program in an efficient and timely manner," Burleigh said, referring to the U.N. program that lets Iraq sell limited amounts of oil to buy humanitarian goods.

The U.S. proposal would remove those limits on exports and would streamline the bulky U.N. bureaucracy, allowing contracts to bring food and medicine into Iraq to be approved automatically.

It would allow Baghdad to borrow against a U.N. escrow fund to buy such goods, encourage humanitarian contributions to Iraq, and strengthen UNICEF and other U.N. programs already on the ground.

The proposal came a day after France put forth a plan for lifting the embargo.

The United States and Britain welcomed some aspects of the French proposal but pointed out that U.N. resolutions require Iraq to be rid of its banned weapons before the embargo can be lifted.

— PETER BURLEIGH
DEPUTY U.S. AMBASSADOR

U.N. weapons inspectors have maintained that Iraq still has such weapons, despite Baghdad's claims it has been disarmed.

Both proposals were intended to jump-start council discussions on the Iraqi question in the aftermath of the December airstrikes by U.S. and British forces. The attacks were motivated by U.N. claims that Iraq wasn't cooperating with U.N. weapons inspections.

The proposals also point to the mounting concern that the oil embargo has failed to achieve the U.N. goal of disarming Iraq and is now only hurting the Iraqi people.

Baghdad responded by demanding that sanctions against Iraq in all their facets should be lifted immediately, in a statement carried Thursday by the official Iraqi News Agency.

The Security Council barred Iraq from freely exporting oil after its 1990 invasion of Kuwait, depriving it of its most valuable commodity.

Concerned that the sanctions were creating devastating hardships for Iraq's 22 million people, the council agreed in 1995 to let Iraq sell limited amounts of oil for humanitarian relief — $5.26 billion over six months.

Sagging oil prices and production limits, however, have prevented Iraq from reaching that ceiling.

Meanwhile, there were two more confrontations in the no-fly zone over northern Iraq early Thursday. An Air Force F-16 fighter fired a high-speed anti-radiation missile at a surface-to-air missile site that had an anti-aircraft artillery system.

An F-15 launched a precision-guided missile at another surface-to-air missile site. In both cases, U.S. officials said Iraqi defenses had posed a threat to U.S. and British forces in the region.

The American planes returned safely to base.

It was the fourth-straight day Iraqi forces challenged the no-fly edict enforced by the United States and Britain.

ACLU could file commandment lawsuit against city

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A meeting Saturday will determine whether the American Civil Liberties Union will join in a dispute that has brought the issue of separation of church and state and free speech to City Hall's doorstep, literally.

The meeting will be the chance for the regional board of the ACLU to decide if it wants to accept the suit against the city of Manhattan for posting a granite monolith featuring a modified version of the Ten Commandments on city property.

Lyman Baker, English instructor at K-State and ACLU member, said it was an earlier city commission meeting that prompted him to become a plaintiff for the suit, collecting at least six other plaintiffs so far.

At a Nov. 3 city commission meeting that shocked and angered many in attendance, Mayor Steve Hall bypassed public comment on the question of moving the monolith from a position next to the City Hall entrance at 1101 Poyntz Ave. Citing more than 1,000 citizen comments on the issue via phone calls, letters, e-mails and petitions, Hall said city staff could say the same thing only so many times.

In a 3-2 vote, commissioners voted not to move the monolith from the position it had occupied since the building's 1998 renovation but rotate it 90 degrees so the words do not face people approaching the entrance.

Baker said not getting a chance to voice his opinion at the commission meeting was one factor that convinced him to take action. The city's legal advice was another factor.

At the meeting, City Attorney William Frost made a short presentation, concluding that the city could retain the monolith with little worry of violating the constitution. To support his conclusion, Frost cited the ## Legal group will meet in Manhattan Saturday to examine case.

1973 ruling in the Anderson vs. Salt Lake City Corp. case that said the Ten Commandments had a non-religious purpose, as well as a Colorado Supreme Court ruling that also said an identical monument was not put up to endorse religion.

"That's the perception that everybody who attended was left with," Baker said. "This is the law. This is what they can do."

However, Baker said he and others, such as the non-profit group American United for the Separation of Church and State, have identified cases that might undermine the two Frost cited.

In Stone vs. Graham, the Supreme Court ruled in 1980 that the Ten Commandments are religious in nature.

Such a ruling might mean that the law no longer stands as it did in 1973, Baker said.

"Going to court is a way of finding out if it really has changed," Baker said. "The orderly way to deal with it is you put your arguments in front of the judges and see what you get."

Another case might cause difficulties for the city even if it does retain the monument, said John Fliter, assistant professor of political science. In the 1997 ruling for Summum vs. Callaghan, the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals said a courthouse could keep a Ten Commandments monolith on the front lawn but, if it did so, could not deny a local church the chance to place a monument of its own religious tenets on the same lawn.

"The city is really opening itself up to some potential problems," Fliter said. "You cannot discriminate on the basis of religious beliefs."

In this case, the issue becomes more of a free speech one than religious one, he said. By keeping the monument, the lawn could become a forum available to any group that calls itself a church, including Fred Phelps' Westboro Baptist Church in Topeka or possibly even the Ku Klux Klan, he said.

Frost said he feels the same way about the city's legal standing as when he made the November presentation, despite being presented with the other rulings. If a suit did arise, Frost said it almost certainly would go before a judge instead of a jury, since no hard facts about the monolith's history are in dispute.

Any previous rulings would be for the judge to consider in that event, he said. Frost said he has made no plans for a suit, as none have been filed at present.

"Until it's filed, it's really hard to predict who the plaintiff is, where it will be held and how long it will take," he said.

Forrest Benney, temporary secretary for the Fraternal Order of Eagles, Aerie and Auxiliary No. 2468, said many members of the group have been watching with a level of amusement.

The local Eagle aerie presented the monolith to the city of Manhattan as a gift in 1958, when it was accepted by the commission's unanimous vote. Before being moved in the 1997 City Hall renovation, the monolith sat for nearly 40 years on the city auditorium lawn.

"It's not the monument that's changed, it's the peoples' attitudes," Benney said.

If removed, Benney said the aerie likely would pay to have the monolith placed near its own building at the corner of Fourth and Colorado streets. Other sites could be considered, however, if interest was shown, he said.

Marshall winners named

By LAUREN POSLADEK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State can add two more names to its growing list of scholarship winners.

Tim Riemann and Sam Halabi, in December, won the Marshall Scholarship which awarded with them two years of graduate study at any school in Great Britain. Riemann and Halabi both chose to study at Oxford University next fall. The award is worth $40,000 to $60,000.

Beth Powers, academic adviser for pre-law and scholarship candidates, said the British government started awarding the Marshall to 40 U.S. students a year during Truman's presidency. It was meant to be a thank-you for the United States' help after World War II through the Marshall Plan as well as part of an effort to promote strong ties between the United States and Great Britain.

K-State has developed a long history of national and international scholarship winners since the mid-1980s. Powers said students benefit from knowing about previous winners.

"History really gives students a boost," Powers said. "When they see the success former K-State students have had, suddenly the scholarships seem more attainable and students are more willing to apply for them."

Marshall applicants can be from any major. Most have a grade point average of 3.7 or higher and have significant involvement in their campus or community, Powers said.

The official Marshall application isn't due until October, but students apply to be the K-State nominations in late spring, Powers said.

"We usually have 10 to 15 applicants for two or three slots, but I'd like to see more," Powers said.

K-State sent three applications last year to compete with 132 others from the 11-state Midwest region. Riemann and Halabi were selected for two of the 20 interview slots. Eventually, 40 winners are chosen by the interviewers from the six national regions.

"It was an honor for two K-state students to be included in a group of only 40 winners," Riemann said. "It says a lot about our university."

Riemann, a December graduate, was the 1997-1998 student body president and had been involved with the Student Alumni Board, Blue Key, Interfraternity Council and Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity.

K-STATE MARSHALL SCHOLAR

Riemann graduated with degrees in agricultural economics and pre-law and a minor in political science. He said he is interested in African development, one of Oxford's strong areas of study.

"I applied for the Marshall specifically because I wanted to get this education at Oxford," Riemann said. "Because of England's colonization and involvement in Africa, it is a great place to study what I'm interested in."

When he finishes his two years in England, Riemann said he plans to go to law school but is unsure of his specific career plans.

"I want to end up in a position where

I can help formulate international policies. I am especially interested in economics and the development of countries," Riemann said.

Halabi, a senior in political science and physical sciences, is also interested in international studies as well as the environment.

"My dad came to America from Lebanon, and I think that influenced my interests from a young age," Halabi said.

Halabi spent two summers studying in the Middle East and is interested in using water as a tool for peace. He also said Oxford will help him in his studies.

"I am really excited to go, because Oxford is one of the great centers for Middle Eastern studies," Halabi said.

"But I am equally excited because of the people I'll meet there. The cultural exchange will be a big part of my time in England."

Halabi has been involved in student government, Student Alumni Board, Blue Key, Undergraduate Grievance Council and Theta Xi fraternity.

Both Riemann and Halabi applied for the Truman scholarship also. Powers said application experience was helpful, but not necessary to win the Marshall.

"The more interviews and experience you have, the more relaxed you are," Powers said. "We provide plenty of practice interviews and other resources through the university to help our applicants be well prepared."

Students interested in applying for the Marshall or another scholarship can contact Powers in the Arts and Sciences offices at 532-6900. Information about the Marshall scholarship can also be obtained through the Internet at www.britishcouncil-usa.org/usabms.htm.

Witnesses could slow Senate trial

By LARRY MARGASAK
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Senate's Democratic leader conceded on Monday that witnesses "may be inevitable" in President Clinton's impeachment trial but said that once live testimony starts the Senate could lose much of its control over the proceedings.

A Republican victory on calling Monica Lewinsky and others could extend the trial indefinitely, said Democratic Sen. Tom Daschle of South Dakota. And he speculated that it also could lead to a Senate-floor spectacle of 100 senators watching her "point to where the president touched her."

Republican Sen. Jon Kyl of Arizona dismissed the warning as "all-or-nothing" scare tactics — "just not true."

As Daschle commented, White House lawyers honed the defense presentation they will begin today. It will focus on conflicts in testimony — a strategy that would be aimed at undercutting House charges of perjury and obstruction of justice but that also could open the way to Republican demands for witnesses to help resolve the disputes. The White House has been fighting that demand, but it now expects witnesses, officials said.

White House Counsel Charles F.C. Ruff will spend several hours presenting opening defense arguments before the trial recesses for Clinton's State of the Union address in the House chamber where the president was impeached.

The Clinton lawyers have expressed interest in some Democrats from the House Judiciary Committee becoming part of the defense team, officials familiar with the White House discussions said. However, there was no indication the White House would adopt the proposal or that the House Democrats would agree to take part.

Meanwhile, Senate Republican aides, speaking on condition of anonymity, said GOP leaders would prefer that senators adopt the demeanor of Supreme Court justices in the audience and not express themselves during the State of the Union address.

The lead prosecutor, Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., has said he will not attend the speech, but his absence won't be related to the trial. The lawmaker said he prefers to avoid the crowds and has missed the address in previous years.

Residents fear store's effect on west side

■ The proposed supercenter plan will go before a planning commission next month.

By CRISTINA JANNEY
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

City planners still are reviewing plans for a proposed Wal-Mart Supercenter to be built on a 24-acre site at the corner of Seth Childs Road and Fort Riley Boulevard, but Manhattan residents are already up in arms over the proposed development.

A Wal-Mart Supercenter is a combination of a discount store, full-service grocery store and specialty shops. The company plans to have the store open 24 hours.

The Manhattan Planning Commission is scheduled to hear the case Feb. 1.

The proposed Wal-Mart site is only blocks away from a residential area. The nearby residents are upset over the addition because they said they fear the new store will cause increased noise levels, distracting lighting, and increased litter and traffic.

Petitions have been circulated among neighbors who have formed a neighborhood association. A general petition also is circulating among Manhattan residents, Pat Johannes, 3116 Arbor Dr., said. She said representatives of the neighborhood association will attend the planning meeting on Feb. 1.

Johannes said she fears cars will travel at high rates of speed down the neighborhood streets.

Perhaps her bigger concern, she said, was what would happen to Manhattan's downtown if the Wal-Mart was built away from Manhattan's traditional shopping center.

"I don't want it to end up a dead place," she said.

She cited the changes that had happened to downtowns in cities like Topeka and Salina when the discount centers moved in away from downtowns. The downtowns changed from being main shopping centers to concentrations of specialty shops and offices.

A plan for a smaller store was approved in 1989, but the time ran out on the previous planned development district, Steve Zilkie, city planner, said. The new project is larger and would include an area of single family housing.

Zilkie said the decision to allow Wal-Mart to build on the site is strictly a zoning and not a commercial decision.

"If it is zoned commercial, we can't say one business can go in there over another," Zilkie said.

Wal-Mart has requested planned development zoning, which will give the city more control over aspects of Wal-Mart's plans such as landscaping, signs and lighting.

If the Wal-Mart development is approved, it will move to the City Commission for approval.

If landowners representing 20 percent of the surrounding property file a protest petition against the development, four instead of three commissioners would have to approve Wal-Mart's plans.

With their arms linked and their voices singing in unison, K-State students and Manhattan residents were led by Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity members in a memorial walk for Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday celebration.

The singing quieted as the crowd approached All Faiths Chapel and sat down for the 45-minute memorial service. Audience members were of different backgrounds, but all were there for one purpose.

"It shouldn't be a day off," Debbie Johnson, K-State alumna, said. "We have this day for a reason. For us just to sit home on the couch seems to belittle his efforts."

Billy Williams, Alpha Phi Alpha president and senior in graphic design, started the service by reading a poem he wrote.

"This is what the celebration is all about. I was thinking of unity when I wrote this poem," Williams said.

The Rev. Daryl Martin then delivered the keynote address and said active, non-violent resistance was the way to fight against oppression.

"It is not a method for cowards," Martin said. "Who will be the next to carry the baton? ... We are not there yet."

Martin's energy brought the crowd to its feet, and his words were appreciated by the audience.

"I liked him the best. He said that it was a struggle for everyone, not just African-Americans," Guy Cognet, senior in social science, said.

The closing candle light ceremony was led by the Rev. Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities at K-State. Candles were distributed to audience members as they lit them one by one.

Alamo Bowl hurt K-State pride, not pocketbook

By MIKE WATSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's lower berth to the Builders Square Alamo Bowl didn't cause K-State any revenue, said Bob Cavello, assistant athletic director for business operations.

The Cats were allotted $1.1 million for the Alamo Bowl. They received $1.4 million for last year's Tostitos Fiesta Bowl appearance.

However, K-State did not suffer due to the lower money allotment, Cavello said. The money earned goes to the Big 12 Conference. It doesn't matter which team goes to the Bowl Championship Series bowl from the Big 12 Championship; all 12 schools share an equal piece of the pie, he said. The money allotted to a team for its bowl appearance is just the right amount to support the team.

Although the Big 12 Conference received the same amount for a BCS bowl when Texas A&M went to the Nokia Sugar Bowl, K-State lost $300,000 — the difference between the Alamo Bowl, a Tier II bowl, and the Sugar Bowl or the Fiesta Bowl, both Tier I bowls.

The difference in money received comes from Tier I bowls, being more expensive and is accounted for in the new equation for bowl spending, Cavello said.

The new equation to control bowl-game spending was developed two years ago because of a dilemma that arose after the Big 12 Championship game between the University of Texas and the University of Nebraska. A Longhorn win sent Texas to the Sugar Bowl and Nebraska to the Orange Bowl. Both schools failed to abide by their contract and overspent their allotment.

After their bowl games, both Texas and Nebraska went to the conference and asked them to pick up the rest of the tab, Cavello said. After seeing the conference make up the difference spent for the two teams, the University of Colorado also asked for reimbursement. The conference voted to help make up the difference but called for a new bowl allocations system.

Cavello said the new equation was developed by Athletic Director Max Urick and the Texas A&M Athletic Director Wally Groff.

"The equation is the accumulated amount between a preset base, travel reimbursement for air mileage and a percentage of ticket sales," Cavello said. "With the new equation, a school can't come back for underselling."

The amount the conference gives the team is just the right amount to support the team, he said. There is rarely any money left after the game, but if there is any, it goes to the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

Even though K-State didn't lose any revenue, the lower bowl bid did have some effect on the fan support.

This year's Alamo appearance drew a crowd in excess of 30,000, said Mike O'Brien, associate athletic director for development. Two years ago there were 45,000 fans attending the Southwestern Bell Cotton Bowl, and last year 40,000 fans attended the Fiesta Bowl.

With the expensive price tags that come with bowl packages or driving down and renting a hotel room, some found the game wasn't worth the cash.

"If I had known the game was going to be so lethargic, I would not have spent all my money to go," Zach Allen, junior in history, said. "The crowd was not as enthused

'X-Files' episode didn't use K-State, Manhattan items

The "X-Files," a Fox Network program, recently set an episode in Kansas, but the episode didn't include a scene in Manhattan as was originally expected.

The Manhattan Chamber of Commerce and the Kansas Film Commission sent the network Manhattan paraphernalia such as K-State football posters, Manhattan phone books, coffee mugs, brochures and postcards.

Becky Blake, executive vice president and director of the Manhattan Convention and Visitors Bureau, said the items were to be used as props in a scene with a hotel desk.

"We get requests several times throughout the year for props and general information about Manhattan," Blake said.

The Kansas Film Commission also was contacted by "The X-Files" for information about the state.

"For that particular show, we sent them information from Kansas to dress the set out in L.A.," said Mary McCaffrey, assistant manager of the commission.

McCaffrey said "The X-Files" had no intention of actually coming to Kansas to film.

Southern Kansas residents advised to prepare for dust

WICHITA — The wind kicks up, sucking dust from farm fields and unpaved roads into the air and darkening the sky.

A scene from the Dust Bowl of the 1930s? No, a snapshot of two days in early 1996, when dust clouds swept over Wichita and made conditions miserable for everyone and dangerous for infants and people with heart and lung conditions.

Now, health officials are advising the parents of young children and people with respiratory and heart disease to stock up on five-day supplies of medicine in case Kansas suddenly should be hit by a dust storm.

Mid-January marks the start of the "blow season," the three-month period when winds typically surpass 20 mph across parts of Kansas.

To alert residents to the problems associated with dusty air, health departments are publishing legal notices in Wichita and in Morton County in the state's southwestern corner.

The notification is part of an agreement with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, which became concerned about air pollution in Wichita after dusty conditions hit the city on Jan. 28 and March 4, 1996. The city's air quality monitors recorded unhealthy air conditions on those days, residents reported clogged sinuses and inflamed lungs, and allergists' waiting rooms were full of patients.

Pope's visit helps city win grant to combat terrorism

ST. LOUIS — Recent terrorist acts across the country have shown that no place is safe, but officials said they'll be ready if chemical or biological weapons are unleashed while Pope John Paul II is in town.

The U.S. Department of Justice has awarded the city $400,000 to prepare police and firefighters, who would be the first to respond to any emergency during the pope's stay. Thousands of people are expected to travel to St. Louis to see John Paul on Jan. 26-27.

"The sky's the limit of what could happen," Police Chief Ronald Henderson said.

Terrorist acts during the 1996 Olympics in Atlanta and a year earlier at the federal building in Oklahoma City have shown the need for such planning, he said.

On Sunday, firefighters showed off equipment paid for with the federal grant. Among the items: 40 chemical protection suits, two inflatable decontamination tents and a $60,000 computer that can analyze vapors and instantly identify 130,000 different chemical compounds.

Mos. of the gear will be housed in a fire station in the city's Central West End. City crews will use it to supplement hazardous materials teams from the Marines and the U.S. Department of Health on call at Lambert Airport in the event of an attack during the pope's visit.

City continues use of photo radar system for speeders

BOULDER, Colo. — The city's photo radar, under fire from speeders and a legislator who claims it is illegal, likely will be extended for four months.

City officials have said they won't decide until March 30 whether to make photo radar and photo at red lights permanent. Several Colorado cities, including Denver, are using photo radar in hopes it will slow drivers down.

Denver's photo-radar program caught an estimated 13,579 drivers speeding in its first four weeks of operation.

Asked about the costs, the acting manager of the transportation division who oversees the demonstration said that through the end of November the city had paid $215,390 to the vendor that provides the equipment and processing of violations.

"Based upon our initial estimate, it is running at a deficit of about $25,000 a month," said the manager, Mike Gardner-Sweeney.

Town Center hires permanent manager

Supervisor plans to fill empty spaces, bring in new business

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After three general managers in the past year and a half, Manhattan Town Center has found one to fill the position permanently.

Allen Raynor, who will oversee the daily operations of the mall, said a couple of unusual situations caused the general manager position to turn over frequently in the last year and a half, but he said he plans to stay for awhile.

"This is my home. I don't plan on going anywhere," Raynor said.

Raynor took over the position after retiring from the Riley County Police Department on Dec. 31. He had been a part-time director of security for the mall the past 11 years and said he had planned to take over as full-time director after his retirement. Raynor said taking over the position of general manager was unexpected.

"I was only on the job a day and a half when this came up," he said. "It didn't take me long to recognize it was a good opportunity. It wasn't like I had to sever one relationship and start over. It was kind of a promotion."

Raynor said his familiarity with the mall and the community will help him be successful in the position. He said he doesn't have any new ideas or plans for the mall — he just wants to get a grasp of what is going on.

"And hopefully continue the excellent service and the opportunity for people to come to Manhattan Town Center and have a safe and enjoyable shopping experience," he said.

Raynor did say he was going to start working with the corporate leasing division to try to fill the empty spaces in the mall.

As of now, though, there are no definite stores making Manhattan Town Center their new home, he said.

"We have several prospects," Raynor said. "There's a lot of things in the works. It's an ongoing situation."

One recent addition to the mall is enjoying success.

Cathy Hill, manager of Eddie Bauer Sportswear, which opened Oct. 1 of last year, said the store is getting a lot of business.

"I would say the main people are the male college students versus female," she said. "But, our demographic is a little bit older than college students."

Hill, who has worked at two other Eddie Bauer stores, said she liked the atmosphere of the Town Center and that she thought the store would continue to be successful.

"I think right now it looks as if everything is going to go really well, and we'll be here for a long time," she said.

While Eddie Bauer is doing well, another store in the mall is about ready to close its doors.

Co-manager Shelley Neumann said The Limited officially will close Jan. 25.

She said there only were 13 racks of clothing left, and everything in the store has been reduced in price.

Woolworth's building purchased by local business

By JENNIFER RYAN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The former Woolworth's building in downtown Manhattan will be revitalized this year.

Frank and Barbara Tillman recently purchased the former Woolworth's building on the corner of Fourth and Houston streets. Frank Tillman, owner of the local software development business IBX, already is working on remodeling plans for the 30,000 square foot building.

Tillman said he has many changes in mind, including adding a hallway and raising ceilings for subdivisions. These subdivisions would create room for retail and office space, some of which would be used for the expansion of his own business. About 60 to 70 percent of the building would be used for office space.

Tillman said he also would like to remove some of the awning and hang more of it on the side of the building facing Houston Street. The 12,000-square-foot basement probably will be used for document storage.

"We're definitely going to add more windows and a skylight. The building has good structure, but there's a lot of touching up to do," he said.

Scott Morrill, project manager of the Manhattan Main Street Project, said he sees this purchase as a sign of expansion for the downtown area.

"This was what we call a white-elephant building," Morrill said.

"Most of the previous owners lived out of town and maybe haven't paid enough attention to the building. We're really excited about Dr. Tillman's ownership," Morrill said.

Morrill said the Manhattan Main Street Project is ready to assist Tillman in any way he would like. The project is exploring some areas that might recall the previous building on the site, the Gillett Hotel.

The Gillett Hotel closed in 1965, and the current building was opened in 1966. Woolworth's Department Store closed in 1982. In the early 1980s, the building was divided into five retail spaces. Morrill said the building has had problems in the past with too much depth.

"The space along the street is about 20 feet wide and 100 feet deep. Most retail businesses would like the dimensions to be opposite in order to have more window space," Morrill said.

"This is a good opportunity for retail businesses, especially some just starting up, to contact Dr. Tillman now and have the space constructed to suit their needs," he said.

Opportunities abound for King observance

Martin Luther King Jr. is one of the greatest Americans ever to have lived. It is therefore appropriate that the man be honored with a day of observance to remember what he did for this country.

But most people just think it's a holiday. Most people think it's an extra-long weekend. Most people only think about King the night before, when they turn off their alarms.

Those people are wrong. This month's observance of King, appropriately named "A Day On, Not a Day Off," provides the entire Manhattan community with plenty of chances to show how much it appreciates King's efforts. People can participate in marches or go hear a speaker. There are also opportunities to participate in community service activities.

The university's MLK Observance Committee, led by Keener Tiffin and Pat Huggins, has done a tremendous job this year by stressing service in addition to education. The committee also does not target the observance only to black people, but to all people. The activities stress the tolerance of all people, just as King did.

Admittedly, K-State is not very diverse. This observance is not only to remember a great man, but also to educate students and make the campus more inviting to and more tolerant of minorities.

The least a person can do during the observance is simply take time to think about what King's message means today. Although it is unlikely to happen, it would be amazing to see just how much progress could be made if everyone made such minimal effort.

If she's qualified, a woman should win Oval Office

Well, men of America, take a deep breath.

Most likely, if you're reading this, you're sitting down. If you aren't, I suggest you take a seat now. The news I bear is a blow to our ever-shrinking throne of dominance.

If you haven't heard by now, there is a possibility that (gasp) a woman will be running for president.

That's right. On Jan. 4, Elizabeth Dole, wife of former Kansas senator and presidential candidate Bob Dole, resigned her position as the president of the American Red Cross. She resigned and said, "At this most important time in our national life, I believe there may be another way for me to serve our country." She's been dropping hints on CNN's "Late Edition" and NBC's "Today Show," claiming Bob thinks he would make a good first spouse.

A woman running for president is nothing new. It has happened before. In 1872, Victoria Claflin Woodhull was the first, running for the Equal Rights Party's platform.

However, never before has a female candidate been such a serious contender. According to a Jan. 12 CNN poll — you know, one of those political polls that have the +/- 4 percent margin of error and pop up on CNN every five minutes — Dole led Texas governor George W. Bush 31 percent to 30 percent in the New Hampshire primary. If Dole does decide to run, there is no doubt she will be one of frontrunners for the Republican nomination for president.

She has served as Secretary of the Department of Transportation, the Secretary of Labor and as the president of the American Red Cross. She was an excellent campaigner, (most would say even better than old Bob) during her husband's presidential run.

Frustration with the scandals and lies in Washington, D.C., leave Americans wanting someone different. In comes the perfect solution — someone who has never ran for, much less held, an elected office.

OK, politics aren't my specialty, nor do I believe they ever will be. I do have one question. Is America really ready for a woman president?

In the past, other countries like Great Britain, Israel, India and Turkey all have had a woman as a head of state. It's not like those countries immediately changed their flag to include pink and white, observed national shopping holidays or anything along those lines. That isn't a big worry.

The woman's place has been viewed as the homemaker for a long time. The cavewoman would kill a saber-toothed tiger while the cavewoman was at home gathering and cleaning. After the kill, the cavewoman would prepare dinner and a couple of cold ones. Now, times have changed. That same cavewoman probably would be shipping the little cavechildren off to cave school and hurrying back to the cave to get supper ready for his executive cavewoman.

The knock on having a woman president always has been that it is a man's job. Women can't handle it. Would a woman be able to order airstrikes and send troops to action? What about those countries that still see women as second-class citizens and don't let them show their faces in public? How would they look at the United States if we had a woman as our commander in chief? These questions are enough to keep women in the homes.

With all the progress our country has made in women's rights, that thinking is out the window. Or is it? I don't think it is entirely. There are still those who follow the philosophy of Norm from "Cheers": "Women: Can't live with them, pass the beer nuts." There are guys who always are going to believe a woman has no place anywhere near Washington, D.C. These people will always exist. I just wonder how many of them are still out there.

I consider myself a regular guy. Hopefully my friends out there will say I watch football, rub sticks together to start a fire, check out Sports Illustrated swimsuit issues and do other typical guy stuff (picture a bunch of grunts like Tim Allen's on "Home Improvement" here) just as much as the next guy. I have to admit I see nothing wrong with having a woman president.

There, I said it. I honestly don't. Just like I don't see anything wrong with having a president who is black, Hispanic, American Indian, Jewish, green, purple or even a University of Kansas graduate. (OK, that was a step too far; sorry about that.)

To me, it is more about what a person stands for rather than who they are. If Dole is going to run for president, and I feel she is the best candidate for the job, then she will get my vote in 2000.

It would be more than a shame if people voted for her just because she is a woman. Even Dole herself, at the 1984 Republican convention, said she hoped for the day a woman would be nominated for president because she was the best candidate, not just because it was time to nominate a woman. I couldn't agree more.

This is not the time in our history to elect a token president, no matter what the reason.

With all that is going on in Washington, we need someone this country can trust and believe and a person who will follow through on their promises of action. Where is John Wayne when we need him?

READERS write

K-State athletes' graduation rates not as awful as columnist suggested

Editor,

In his attempt to excoriate several Division I universities for the lack of graduation success of their black football players, Boston Globe columnist Derrick Z. Jackson relied solely on figures from the 1998 annual NCAA report on the graduation rates of student athletes. He did not visit the schools. He did not visit with student athletes or coaches at the schools. He did not consult a journal like The Chronicle of Higher Education to gain even a cursory understanding of what has taken place in the academic setting of the student athlete in the past 10 years.

Jackson quoted the report as being "... based on the percentage of athletes who entered school between the 1988-89 year and the 1991-92 year and graduated within six years." What he failed to quote is that the NCAA study also stated:

"Only student athletes who enroll as freshmen, receive athletics-related financial aid and who graduate from that institution within six years of initial enrollment are tracked. Student athletes who transfer in good academic standing and graduate elsewhere count against their original institution as not graduating and are not counted in the freshman cohort rate for their second institution."

Caution about interpretation:

Care should be taken in applying graduation-rate data to individual institutions. Also, when comparing percentages from sport to sport, some of the sets being measured are quite small. It is not uncommon for a basketball team to have only one senior, which means the graduation rate for that team for that year would be 100 percent or 0 percent, depending on whether the athlete graduated. Neither percentage would be especially significant in such a case.

The numbers from this report seem to merit the "plantation status" Jackson assigns to K-State, as well as Tennessee, Ohio State and Florida:

"Kansas State graduates only seven percent of African-American players ... it was the worst rate among the 46 teams that are either among the AP's Top 25 ranked major college teams or that played in this season's bowl games."

What is apparent from these particular NCAA numbers is that few black student athletes who entered K-State between 1986 and 1992 graduated within six years, and it could be assumed that there was little attention paid to the academic needs of these student athletes. What is not apparent is Jackson's implication that the same conditions exist for black student athletes at K-State today.

Every time he described K-State, Jackson used the present tense, e.g., "Caring, support and sincerity at K-State seems to apply only to what happens on the football field."

Jackson obviously is unaware of the academic counselors and tutors who now provide support to all student athletes at K-State, the University Experience course that is required of all first-year student athletes, library and research workshops that football players attended prior to the completion of an academic center that is now available to all student athletes.

Had the columnist spent a little more time in preparation he would have also been aware that 1) schools with small athletic department budgets were ill-prepared to provide the academic support required for the influx of Proposition 48 student athletes that began in 1984 2) the unique needs of student athletes have only garnered special attention at most universities in the past 10 years 3) there is ample documentation that football and basketball players in more successfully competitive programs are less likely to graduate than players in less successfully competitive programs.

Wildcat football fans can take comfort in the fact that most of the players tracked in the last three NCAA studies were not recruited by Bill Snyder; he inherited them. This in no way exonerates the university, or Snyder, from the academic assistance that these student athletes failed to receive.

By 1993, an academic adviser was in place to work exclusively with members of the football team who struggled academically; no mention ever was made of a player's race. The adviser was instrumental in laying the ground work for the current assistance program that takes advantage of many tutors and counselors. In 1993, I worked to create a library orientation and research workshop for first-year football players. I learned that the academic success of Wildcat football players was a priority of Snyder's from visiting with him on the subject, by seeing what was in place and because he insisted that my first workshop be attended by all football players. I also learned that Snyder had plans for an academic center long before the money was ever realized.

Jackson erred in implying that the football program at K-State continues to neglect the academic needs of student athletes. The academic assistance available to Wildcat football players is equal, if not superior, to any school in the country, and all of the players are encouraged to take advantage of it or risk the wrath of Snyder. Jackson simply was preaching to his own choir at the expense of anyone who cares about K-State.

The fact that the Collegian chose to reprint

Jackson's column suggests that all students at your university could benefit from library research instruction. With the benefits of this instruction the Collegian would be more able to distinguish between what informs its readers and what misleads them.

Percentage of indirect overhead funds should go to support library

Editor,

A disturbing situation came to light during an interview with the dean of libraries, as reported in the Jan. 15 Collegian. The dean indicated that, in fact, the library does not receive any of the "indirect overhead funds" derived from grants that faculty win through their research efforts. These are funds awarded by such external granting agencies as the National Institutes of Health, National Science Foundation and NASA. They are given to universities (in addition to the direct funds to support the research) to cover a variety of expenses that arise from having research occur here, such as support for business office staff and for the library, especially journal subscriptions. Thus, the administrative exclusion of the K-State library from receiving indirect overhead funds clearly violates the purpose for which they were given.

This is not a trivial amount of money. As an example, my own research over the last 28 years has brought in a total of $3,155,521 of direct cost funds for supplies and salaries for many undergraduate student assistants. In addition, a total of $1,121,028 of indirect overhead funds, some definite percentage of which should have gone directly to the library for journal subscriptions in support of the research.

I hesitate to think of what would happen were someone to do an audit to determine how the indirect overhead funds actually were spent. Such lack of administrative support for journal subscriptions, when faculty have done their part to pay for them, makes a mockery of scholarly efforts by faculty to raise the quality and reputation of K-State in making personal sacrifices in family and holiday time to write grant proposals.

We therefore ask: Why were those indirect overhead funds, that faculty efforts brought in, not used for our library and the journal subscriptions that both faculty and "typical students" could use if they were available?

— Gary W. Conrad

Spokespeople promote unfair generalizations

Monica Lewinsky. The name sounded vaguely familiar when it was mentioned in conversation the other day. And yet, it was a name I couldn't quite place. Was she that sassy, new designer for Christian Dior? Or maybe Brad Pitt's new girlfriend?

No, I am not a bimbo. I know who Lewinsky is. I read the Starr Report. Because I am 22 years old, I might be perceived as a bimbo. Especially if Lisa G., an entertainment reporter, has an opinion. Lisa appeared as a guest on Fox News Channel's "O'Reilly Factor" to discuss what Generation X thinks about Lewinsky and President Clinton's trial.

Lisa said people in their 20s are just too busy shopping and dating to worry about what is happening in our nation's capitol. Those few in our generation paying attention (or too ugly to find a date), care more about how many bagels Lewinsky can eat in one sitting than any effects the trial might have on future generations.

I don't remember voting for Lisa to represent my generation, but maybe I was shopping on election day. Come to think of it, I am not even registered to vote in that election.

Lisa isn't alone in trying to speak for me. Because Jesse Jackson is the leader of the Rainbow/PUSH Coalition, he often is viewed as the unofficial spokesperson for black America. Patricia Ireland, the president of the National Organization for Women has been perceived as the spokesperson for women. I know a lot of women, and none of them belong to her organization.

I must have had a date the day Jackson and Ireland were selected as spokespeople. My vote would have gone to Judd Nelson's character in the movie "The Breakfast Club." Nelson's character doesn't look like me, but his character was thinking like me when he said, "Speak for you? I don't even know your language." I only wish Ireland, Jackson, Lisa G. and every other representative felt the same.

Everyone knows stereotypes are bad. No one, however, raises an eyebrow when these representatives speak for an entire race, generation or sex. The only way to escape being lumped together with a Lisa G. or a Ireland is to be born a white, baby-boomer male.

White, baby-boomer males are wild cards. Harrison Ford will never be asked to describe the thoughts of white males from his generation. They escape stereotypes. Apparently, each baby-boomer white male has his own opinion. So do I but because of my race, sex, minority status or age, no one asks what I think. Everyone thinks they already know. They heard my opinion from Lisa G., Ireland, Jackson or from one of my many other spokespeople.

That's about to change. Now I speak for myself. I can't tell you what biracial women think, or what 22-year-old female K-State students think or what graduates of Gardner-Edgerton High School think about the world around them. I will tell you what Danedri Thompson, the K-State student, 22-year-old female graduate of Gardner-Edgerton High School thinks.

That's it.

King's birthday marked throughout Kansas

■ Former student body president addresses Hutchinson celebration.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — Hundreds of Wichitans gathered Monday in a local church to remember the late Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. and hear the call to unite against the racism he had devoted his life to fighting.

The celebration at Tabernacle Baptist Church, one of the many across Kansas, brought out old and young alike in a litany of songs and prayers that filled the sanctuary. The recurring theme was the need to put religion at the lead of the civil-rights movement.

"The reason racism and injustice still exist is because the church is divided," said the Rev. Kevin Graham, who delivered the sermon at the King celebration sponsored by the local ministerial alliance.

Graham told his congregation it was God who gave King the dream that all of his people be set free and that King spent his life trying to get the church to unite so it might erase racism. But churches remain divided — denominationally, racially, socially and economically.

"We can't expect unity in the Statehouse, we can't expect unity in the White House, we can't expect unity in our house, if the church house is divided," he said.

Again and again at gatherings around the state, the sermon was much the same.

Bernard Franklin, vice president of the National Center for Fathering and a former K-State student body president, spoke about the need for adults to spend time with their children during a celebration at Hutchinson Community College.

"This is your day. You represent the vision that Dr. King had," he told the children in the audience. "I apologize that we don't do something more than this to make you understand that someone lived and died so we can be here today."

King "left a great legacy, much of which is not being kept or being passed on," the Rev. Earl Abel told another audience Sunday at the Orpheum Theater in Wichita.

The black community, he said, "is going nowhere fast," a condition he blamed on people foregoing their faith and failing to practice Christian values.

The social ills that plague black America — crime, drugs and poverty — are a reflection of a people who have abdicated their faith in God and forsaken growth and values for the pursuit of material goals, Abel said.

During the worst times of slavery, economic hardship and turmoil, blacks have turned to religious faith. That means educating young people and passing on the virtues of work, Abel said.

Hutchinson NAACP President Darrell Pope said affirmative action programs are being dismantled with no solutions to level the playing field for minorities.

"I feel a sense of regret and concern about the direction and condition that our country and society in general has moved toward," Pope said.

"Am I saying that all is doom and gloom? No. What I am saying is that there is no way we can accomplish the idea Dr. King's dream left us until we decide as a people to judge our fellow man by the content of his character and not by the color of his skin," he said.

KING

Fallon said the light being passed was the symbol of the presence and love of God.

"This is the day that I think we live up the life and dream of Dr. King. Having met Martin Luther King when he was here at K-State, he's had a great impact on my life," Fallon said.

"Non-violent action and the emphasis on love are important themes in my way of thinking to bring about social change," he said.

King had spoken at Ahearn Field House, and there was a service for him in 1968 at the All Faiths Chapel to honor his death.

Fallon said King's message needed to be shared because at the time there was violence in Kansas, both in cities and between students.

Brandon Clark, Alpha Phi Alpha historian and junior in elementary education, was the coordinator for this year's celebration, along with K-State's American Ethnic Studies Program.

Clark said he wanted to go with the traditional way of celebrating King's birthday.

"I wanted to keep it in tone with what Dr. King always wanted, to walk together in union, if only for one day," Clark said.

More than 80 people attended the memorial service, and among those was K-State President Jon Wefald. He said he was impressed by the turnout, which he said was the biggest ever.

"I think that Dr. King's celebration is a reminder of how we have to continue the struggle," Wefald said.

"It reminds us that there are people who are willing to give up their life for freedom and justice," he said.

The Rev. Daryl Martin delivers the keynote address during the memorial service. Martin said active, non-violent resistance was the way to fight against oppression.

Turnovers hurt 'Cats in weekend UT loss

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN, Texas — Breakdowns by K-State are coming from areas where they are least expected.

Expected senior leadership has not materialized, and all of a sudden, the Wildcats find themselves in trouble in the Big 12 Conference race.

K-State made a season-high 25 turnovers in a 65-59 loss to Texas on Saturday — 18 of them coming from a senior quartet of Shawn Rhodes, Manny Dies, Chris Griffin and Ayome May.

"It's extremely frustrating for me," said Rhodes, who led the way with seven turnovers. "We can't accept that from the older guys. We have to be able to recognize things and not take a half to make adjustments."

Dies came off a 19-point performance Wednesday against Nebraska to score two points and get three rebounds while committing four fouls against Texas. He had four turnovers.

"You can't have one guy step up one night and step down another," Coach Tom Asbury said. "That's a problem. We can't plan on guys playing. And it's seniors as much as anyone else. You can't have a guy step down all the way."

Asbury tried to shake up his team by starting freshmen Josh Kimm and Travis Reynolds along with May, Rhodes and Tony Kitt.

That group made just three shots and had five turnovers in the first four minutes of the game.

The Wildcats also shot poorly, finishing at 37 percent.

Track and field kicks off strong season

By SARAH CRAIG
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State kicked off the indoor track and field season with strong showings at the Wildcat Invitational this weekend. Competition included a men's heptathlon and women's pentathlon against Nebraska and Oklahoma State.

In the heptathlon, the Cats placed the top collegiate competitor, senior Jason Williams. Williams placed third in overall competition with a score of 5374, falling behind a former Olympian and a top-10 finalist in the U.S. nationals. Junior competitor Justin Robinson placed fifth overall in the heptathlon with a score of 4965.

Coach Cliff Rovelto said that while his men's multi-event competitors gave strong performances, he expects the team to improve with the addition of two competitors who did not compete in the heptathlon this weekend.

"This is awful early in the year for multi-event athletes," Rovelto said. "Typically you don't see really outstanding performances at this time of year. We had two compete in this event, but we have two others that are about as good as there is in collegiate track and field."

"With this group of four guys, it's definitely the strongest group of any team in the

In team competition, the men's team placed second behind Nebraska. Nebraska scored 156, K-State 112 and Oklahoma State 64. The women's team placed first, scoring 138. Nebraska had 135 and Oklahoma State 55.

Big 12 and may prove to be the best group in the entire country."

Sophomore Thomas Weiler and senior Attila Zsivoczky did not compete.

Weiler returns having placed fourth in the Big 12 Conference meet last year, while Zsivoczky holds the highest returning collegiate score in the country in the decathlon and K-State's highest score in any heptathlon.

Rovelto said he expects this combination of athletes to give an impressive showing at the conference championship at the end of February.

In women's competition, Carmen Wright, the only K-State multi-event competitor, placed first among the collegiate athletes and second overall.

Wright, a sophomore, earned a score of 3,955, one of the top-five scores in K-State history for women's pentathlon.

"She's in very lofty company, having had that kind of score. Again, this is early for the female athletes as well, and I would certainly anticipate that she would score higher later in the year. I think she's going to prove to be one of, if not the best, athletes maybe this year as a sophomore that we've ever had here," Rovelto said.

Wright has earned personal bests in each of her five events during her first month of competition. She achieved three of these in this weekend's meet in hurdles, high jump and 800-meter run. Rovelto said that with this kind of start on the season, Wright will continue to progress.

"I think when she gets involved in more heated competition and she's a little better rested and prepared, I think she's going to have a very big score," Rovelto said.

In team competition, the men's team placed second behind Nebraska. Nebraska scored 156, K-State 112 and Oklahoma State 64. The women's team placed first, scoring 138. Nebraska had 135 and Oklahoma State 55.

Three meet records were set in this weekend's competition. Junior Emily Diederich was first in the 1,000 meters with a time of 2:53.61, sophomore Annie Wetterhus was first in the 3,000 meters with a time of 9:43.93, and junior Erin Anderson was first in pole vault with a height of 12-1 1/2.

second half SURGE

S

BY NICK BRATKOVIC

saturday night's contest between K-State and Texas was quite a battle.

For 40 minutes the two teams scrambled for loose balls, slammed balls in frustration and had disputes between opposing benches. As an animated crowd of 4,215 fans looked on, K-State prevailed 75-68.

With the victory, the Cats moved to 10-5, including only two losses out of five games in the Big 12 Conference. Texas is now 8-7, 2-3 in Big 12 play.

In the first half, Longhorns' guard Kim Lummus hit three three-pointers in a three minute span. Her shooting gave Texas an early seven-point lead.

Entering intermission, the Cats trailed by five. Both K-State and Texas shot around 50 percent. The difference early was rebounding, as K-State found itself out-rebounded 17-9.

"They were dominating us on the boards," K-State coach Deb Patterson said. "Going into halftime, Patterson said Texas and its style of play was dictating the game's pace."

"I didn't feel at all as though we were playing a punch, counter-punch game," Patterson said. "I felt as though Texas was dictating every punch of that first half in terms of intensity and execution."

With 16:54 left to play in the second half, K-State started to throw some punches of its own as it went on a 17-2 run.

The Cats' run helped them build a 14-point lead. It was the play of freshman Kristin Rethman that helped ignite the run. Rethman hit three three-pointers during the stretch, and she finished the game with 17 points.

Texas coach Jody Conradt said her team needed to play more consistently.

"In this league, you can't take plays off," Conradt said. "If we could replay that one stretch, we might still be playing."

With her shooting from the perimeter, K-State point guard Essence Perry was instrumental in leading the offense. Perry said she was playing despite battling a leg injury.

"It's been bothering me a lot lately," Perry said. "But I am not going to allow injuries to take away my ability to play the game."

Patterson said Perry's 39 minutes, playing in pain, gave K-State a chance to win.

"Essence stepped up in the second half and played the type of game that we had to have to beat Texas," Patterson said.

The Longhorns would battle back to within four points, but K-State, led by forward Nicky Ramage's key foul shots at the end of the game, clinched the victory.

"I just went out there and tried to relax and focus," Ramage said. "The last one is when you win."

Jordan, other legends leave hoops; who will save professional basketball?

VIEWPOINT

CRANE

I have many venues that are a possible "column-in-waiting" with all the recent events in the world of sports. The word to describe these developments is "hectic."

The biggest news to me has to be Michael Jordan hanging up his jersey for the last time.

It seems to be chic to quit something in the most-shining moments these days. Jordan followed Jerry Seinfeld's lead in retiring last week in the peak of his career. He led the "Un-beat-a-Bulls" to their third-straight title on his way to his seventh career title.

He left the game with six championship rings, 10 scoring titles, five most valuable player awards and six NBA Finals MVPs and had the highest career scoring average of all time at 31.5 points a game. As Seinfeld would say, "The list goes on, yada yada yada."

I hated to see Jordan go, as he was definitely at the top of his game. By the same token, however, he couldn't have picked a better time to quit. The NBA lockout, Phil

Jackson's retirement, Jerry Krause's horrible management and many other small conflicts and problems seemed to outweigh the chance at another championship in Jordan's eyes.

Jordan set the basketball world on its ear with his announcement. It was the last thing the NBA needed at this point. Talk about getting kicked while you are down.

Jordan is the greatest player of all time, and the league will be hard-pressed to find another professional of Jordan's caliber.

Regardless of your opinion of Michael Jordan, his stats speak for themselves. No one can dispute his accomplishments. "His Airness" is also a walking billboard off the court. Jordan is the most-recognizable man on the planet due to our capitalistic society's advertisers, who have Jordan hawking everything from long-distance service to hot dogs.

What it comes down to is this: I think this is the first step in the downfall of the NBA. Once the legends are gone and the salaries keep going up, the fans may not come back. It took Mark McGwire to save baseball. Who's going to save the NBA? Tough call. I know this much: I don't see Karl Malone or Shaquille O'Neal doing it. Malone is a crybaby and getting up there in years, and as for O'Neal, he's too busy shooting rap videos and skipping free-throw practice.

My take is the NBA needs a new gimmick and it has to develop on the court through the teams and players. We've seen Wilt and Dr. J. The Celtics and Lakers had Bird and Magic. Jordan has reigned King of the Court in the '90s ... now what? (If it seems like I ask "what's next?" many times, well, that's how I come to conclusions these days. I ask myself what could possibly be next, think of the worst or most-ridiculous scenario and prepare myself for it.)

Jordan gave kids a lot of dreams and was a role model for millions. He deserves to hit the links with his buddies and smoke his cigars. We haven't heard the last of Jordan, and I hope we don't. He defined professionalism and overcame a lot of things in his life, including being cut from his high school basketball team, to become the best. It provides another example of where hard work can get you.

This past weekend provided another travesty, the Mike Tyson vs. Francois Botha fight. Tyson was a great fighter, but I think he's been taking notes from MTV's "Celebrity Deathmatch." Tyson won the fight in the fifth round on a perfect punch, but he was losing the fight on all the cards.

After a lockup with the "White Buffalo" at the end of the first round, Tyson had locked arms with Botha and was pulling and twisting Botha's arm in an attempt to break it. Tyson needs some anger-control training or a leash. After all Tyson went through to try his license back, what's he doing trying to break arm in the ring?

Granted, boxing isn't a peaceful event for nuns to watch on a Saturday afternoon, but wasn't Tyson's munching on Evander Holyfield's ear enough? What's next for this guy? Boxing's first attempted murder in the ring? Tyson needs a sport with no rules.

If Tyson does get kicked out of boxing again, I think Ultimate Fighting would be his forte. I have a better idea: ask President Clinton to pull our boys out of the Middle East and simply send Tyson after Saddam Hussein. I bet Hussein would hold hands with Iron Mike and give him a guided tour of exactly where he keeps all his toys out of fear for his life.

You know you can tell the millennium is nearing when Jordan is done, Marty Schottenheimer resigns and boxers are maiming each other in the ring. The final step will be when Charles Barkley becomes governor of Alabama. It will happen ... after all, I predicted Jesse "The Body" Ventura's win.

Pippen to leave Bulls, boost Houston lineup

By CHRIS SHERIDAN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Scottie Pippen will be traded from the Chicago Bulls to the Houston Rockets as soon as the lockout ends later this week, three NBA sources told The Associated Press on Monday.

The Bulls will sign Pippen to a deal worth $67.2 million for five years before trading him and get forward Roy Rogers and a second-round draft pick in return, said the sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Although the salaries for Pippen and Rogers do not match, the deal is allowable under NBA rules because Houston will have enough salary cap room to fit in Pippen's contract. His salary for this season will be $10.6 million.

The deal will not be finalized until the lockout ends Wednesday or Thursday.

"We're not going to confirm anything," Rockets spokesman Tim Frank said. "The lockout is technically not over. We're still under lockout restrictions. No deal can officially be done until that cloak is lifted."

Pippen, a six-time champion with the Bulls, talked to the Rockets about signing with them as a free agent. It was not immediately clear why he agreed to a sign-and-trade deal, but other teams were also discussing similar deals involving Pippen with Bulls general manager Jerry Krause.

The Bulls will sign Pippen to a deal worth $67.2 million for five years before trading him, and get forward Roy Rogers and a second-round draft pick in return, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The acquisition of Pippen should clear the way for Charles Barkley to re-sign with Houston, giving the Rockets a formidable front line of Barkley, Pippen and Hakeem Olajuwon.

The 33-year-old Pippen has been with Chicago since the 1987-88 season when he was drafted out of Central Arkansas. Last year, he averaged 19.1 points and 5.2 rebounds per game.

The seven-time all-star forward is considered one of the top three free agents up for grabs as NBA teams prepare to open training camps delayed by the 6 1/2-month lockout.

Pippen should be in uniform for the Rockets when they play an exhibition game against San Antonio on Saturday.

The Rockets also were interested in the other top two free agents, Antonio McDyess and Tom Gugliotta.

But McDyess has ruled out Houston as a possibility, and Gugliotta appears likely to sign with Minnesota or Denver.

Transfers breathe life into offense

Tony Kitt and Cortez Groves have added power and points to the men's basketball team.

By RICHARD SMITH
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Call them Yin and Yang. Or maybe Thunder and Lightning. Whatever the analogy, community college transfers Tony Kitt and Cortez Groves have combined to add a definite spark to the K-State attack this year.

The inside/outside combination of Groves, the Wildcats' shooting guard, and Kitt, power forward, has left opposing defenses with the difficult chore of deciding which one to zero in on.

"That's my man," Kitt said. "Cortez is good. By him being so good, it opens things up so much for me. It's that simple."

"I just have more confidence with shooting the ball, knowing he can get the rebound if I miss," Groves said. "Knowing that Tony's down there just makes me feel more comfortable."

Despite having only 17 games of Division I experience, Groves leads the team in scoring at 11.1 points per contest, while Kitt is nipping at his heels with a 10.9 average.

Coach Tom Asbury is among the many surprised by the duo's quick start.

"The majority of junior college players don't come into a program at this high a level and have anywhere near that kind of success," Asbury said. "But, they're both really good players."

Though alike in success thus far, nearly everything else about the pair is different. Groves wears number 24, Kitt, number 42. Groves is reserved and soft-spoken, while Kitt quickly is making a name for himself as the most outgoing player on the squad. Even the paths that have led to their joint success in Manhattan are as different as night and day.

Groves, the 6-foot 5-inch junior, hails from Raytown, Mo., and grew up on the legends of KSU basketball. When his ACT scores came back lower than expected, Groves made a beeline to Moberly Community College — the same detour that Wildcat great Mitch Richmond took on his way to NBA stardom.

"I hardly knew anything about Moberly," Groves said. "I just signed because he went there."

As Groves was beginning to chase his purple-and-white dreams through America's heartland, a Charlotte, N.C., native named Tony Kitt was busy being named Elon College's most valuable player, following a season in which he led the team in scoring, rebounding and field-goal percentage.

Despite putting up such productive numbers, Kitt was suspended from the team for disciplinary reasons that season.

After a year out of basketball, Kitt arrived at Colby Community College seeking a fresh start. He found it, along with another team MVP award, by posting 20.7 points and 10.7 rebounds per game in his sophomore season.

Having found success halfway across the country, Kitt opted not to press his luck by moving again.

The 6-8 forward now pitches his tent in the lane at Bramlage Coliseum, averaging 9.4 rebounds a game, good enough to put him third in the Big 12 Conference.

"That's just natural," Kitt said. "I've got a knack for just going and grabbing the ball."

Though Groves and Kitt seem finally to have found their basketball niche, not all has been sunshine and light — or treys and offensive boards, for that matter.

Both players have struggled mightily since the beginning of Big 12 play, a stretch during which the Cats have stumbled to a 1-4 mark.

"In preseason I was great," Kitt said. "Since conference started, I've been playing like crap."

Asbury said this latest step in the transition from community college to Division I is just taking the pair a bit longer to master.

"All it takes is confidence, and they'll get it back," he said.

"Having one good game, that does it in this business," Asbury said.

Though frustrated by their recent difficulties, the players remain upbeat about the remainder of the season.

"I think I'm OK," Groves said. "I just need to step my game up."

"There's nothing that can prepare you for this level except this level," Kitt said. "This isn't juno anymore, and it's a lot harder."

"I need to turn it up a notch, and I know I can."

CATS

"Their scores didn't come in their set offense. The scores came in transition off steals. Thirty-one points off turnovers," Asbury said.

"In those situations, I saw no purpose, no reason. They are very athletic. They are in the passing lanes. That's going to cause a few of them, but we have an experienced enough team to be able to handle that situation."

Texas (9-8, 5-0 Big 12) had a 15-0 run in the first half that had Coach Rick Barnes wishing he could "bottle that first 11 minutes."

But the Wildcats (12-6, 1-4) had a 14-0 run, and the half ended with the Longhorns leading just 35-32.

The game stayed close throughout the second half until William Clay and Kris Clack each made two free throws in the final 30 seconds to preserve the victory.

Gabe Muoneke scored 20 points to lead Texas before leaving the game, with 1:39 remaining, with a hyper-extended left elbow.

Josh Reid scored 18 points to lead K-State.

Serbs attack, turn back war crimes investigator

By MELISSA EDDY
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MALOPOLJE, Yugoslavia — Defying global outrage over the massacre of civilians, Serb forces pounded villages Monday with artillery. The government also ordered the American head of the Kosovo peace mission to leave the country and barred a U.N. investigator looking into the massacre.

Fighting spread Monday to northern Kosovo, where ethnic Albanian rebels attacked a Serb vehicle, wounding five policemen in an ambush 25 miles northwest of the provincial capital, Pristina.

The defiant moves after last week's massacre of 45 ethnic Albanian civilians indicated President Slobodan Milosevic was willing to risk further international pressure in his campaign against rebels seeking independence from the main Yugoslav republic, Serbia.

NATO's supreme commander, Gen. Wesley Clark, and German Gen. Klaus Naumann, planned to fly to the Yugoslav capital of Belgrade on Tuesday to warn Milosevic he faces military action unless he abides by the U.S.-negotiated Oct. 12 deal that ended seven months of fighting.

In comment broadcast on CNN, Clark said NATO could be prepared to act militarily within days or hours. "This is going to be a very clear and a very blunt message," the U.S. general said.

Kosovo's Serb minority and Milosevic's ultranationalist allies have been demanding the government crush the ethnic Albanian Kosovo Liberation Army.

Tensions rose dramatically Saturday after international verifiers found the bodies of 45 ethnic Albanians, including three women and a 12-year-old boy, in a gully near the village of Racak (pronounced RAH-chak), 20 miles south of Pristina.

William Walker, the American head of the international peace verification mission, accused Serb police of the massacre, despite government claims the dead were guerrillas killed in combat.

Late Monday, the Yugoslav government, in a statement distributed by its Tanjug news agency, said Walker's comments were in flagrant violation of the agreement made with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, which oversees the October agreement. The government ordered Walker to leave Yugoslavia within 48 hours.

The U.N. Security Council condemned the killings and called for an immediate investigation. The council also urged Yugoslavia to reverse its decision to expel Walker.

In Vienna, David Johnson, the U.S. ambassador to the OSCE, expressed outrage Monday over Yugoslav authorities' "scandalous attempt to present the cold-blooded slaughter and mutilation of civilians as a military operation against terrorists."

In Brussels, Belgium, NATO spokesman Jamie Shea called the expulsion order outrageous. He told BBC television he hoped Yugoslav authorities would "come to their senses and reconsider this unwise decision."

On Monday, Albania's parliament called on all Albanians to unite in support of the ethnic Albanian community in Kosovo. In Jerusalem, several Israeli lawmakers argued Monday that the Jewish state should break off relations with Yugoslavia over the latest massacre.

There was little sign, however, that the Yugoslav government was prepared to soften its hard-line stand. On Monday, Serb forces unleashed tank and artillery barrages on Racak and other nearby villages.

NATO threatened airstrikes last year to pressure Milosevic to call off his offensive against ethnic Albanian rebels. Ethnic Albanians form about 90 percent of Kosovo's 2 million people, and many want independence.

Milosevic agreed Oct. 12 to halt the offensive and begin talks with the ethnic Albanians on Kosovo's future.

Both sides, however, have rejected U.S. proposals for expanded self-rule for Kosovo. With diplomacy at a stalemate, prospects of a full-scale resumption of fighting have increased.

Swing sweeps campus

By JODY JOHNSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The revival of swing dancing is sweeping the nation, from TV commercials to music videos. Manhattan residents now have the chance to learn the moves.

The K-State Ballroom Dance Club is offering Club Dance, a class that will teach several types of swing dancing.

The class, which begins Jan. 26, is available to anyone interested in learning about swing dance, said Josh Hernandez, instructor and graduate student in speech.

"Swing dancing has brought back a wonderful era with a lot of fun stuff like the zoot suits," Hernandez said.

The class will introduce swing-dance styles such as the West Coast Swing, the East Coast Swing, the Lindy Hop, the Shag and the Jitterbug.

"I look at all the styles of swing dancing," Hernandez said. "Every region of the country has its own style."

Throughout his life, Hernandez has traveled around the country to learn many different dance styles. He travels several times a year to do research and keep up with the latest dance trends.

"I keep in touch with the ballroom community around the country," he said. "I stay on top of the new steps that are out there so Manhattan can get the new information."

The class is open to beginners as well as more experienced dancers.

"Everybody can do it," said Sara Saunders, senior in elementary education and Hernandez's dance partner.

Saunders and Hernandez, who have won several dance competitions together, said the class is a good way to improve communication with others.

"Swing is a great way to be involved with other people socially," she said. "It doesn't have to be serious or boring, and it's a great date activity."

Saunders said a lot of people are intimidated by dancing because they don't have a lot of experience.

"A lot of people are scared to move," she said. "This is a great way to get started."

Class sizes are small so each student can receive the individual attention els," he said.

Hernandez also focuses on giving students the opportunity to dance with different partners, which teaches them to be stronger and more confident with the moves.

Along with being a fun social activity, swing dancing is a great way to stay in shape, Saunders said.

"It's really exhausting," she said. "You have to have muscular strength to be quick and to react."

Hernandez said he is excited about bringing couples from his classes with him to competitions.

He said he'd like to see K-State's dance club enter competitions in the next few years.

"I'd like to see K-State winning trophies and bringing ballroom dancing into more popularity here," he said.

Hernandez also will be teaching swing dancing Tuesday evenings at Lucky Brewgrille.

"All the steps I'm teaching this semester will be perfect for Manhattan, because no one here knows them," he said.

Hernandez said he often relates communicating with a dance partner to his debate work in college.

"Dancing is like verbal communication," he said. "Sometimes we have to yell. Then eventually, as communication improves, we only have to whisper. That's when it becomes magic."

Hernandez's eight-week course will be from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesday through Friday.

The class will cost $60 for couples and $35 for singles. The cost includes a syllabus, guest instructors, competitions and parties.

Sign-up sheets will be posted this week in the K-State Student Union. The first 50 couples to sign up will receive a free one-hour private lesson with Hernandez, he said.

needed to learn the dances. He said the attention allows students to understand the moves quicker.

"We want to make sure the couples know their steps well," he said.

Antonia Pigno, the club's faculty adviser and a student in the class, said it is a great activity.

"Anyone can join the classes," Pigno said. "It's a lot of fun and it's very aerobic."

The class involves teaching the dance steps several different ways to allow the students to perform the dances to fast and slow music. Hernandez said the goal is to allow students to perform the dances in a variety of settings and to give them options with different types of music.

"When you go to a club, you have a mixture of music, and you have dancers with different experience lev-

Andy Oyer, senior in history and business administration, performs with his band, Last Call, Saturday night at Rowdy Trouty's in Aggieville. Last Call plays cover songs of popular music and takes many requests from the audience.

JEFF COOPER/COLLEGEIAN

nothing Original

Last Call doesn't write music. The group's success comes from doing just the opposite.

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

Singers, songwriters and small-time musical acts around Manhattan spend a great deal of time in their quest to become the area's next hot new band. Then there's the cover band Last Call.

A familiar name in Aggieville for almost three years, Last Call is a bit different than other local bands, due to the fan base it has developed by playing anything but original music.

"That's our secret," said lead vocalist Andy Oyer, senior in history and business administration. "Most people are trying to make it with their music, but we just don't want to."

Erin Ferriter, junior in public relations and back-up vocalist, said Last Call was able to attract fans without much effort.

"I don't think we've put up a single poster on campus to promote ourselves," she said.

The members of the band said the idea behind their success is simple: no one wants to hear original music at the bar scene, so they don't play it.

"It's hard to get people to listen to original stuff," Ferriter said. "When people go to the bars, they just want to be able to relax and drink and sing along with the band."

This philosophy has earned the band notoriety beyond Manhattan. Last Call has had play dates in Lawrence, Pittsburg, Kan., and soon it will perform at Eskimo Joe's in Stillwater, Okla.

Last Call formed a few years ago when Oyer and a friend, guitarist Chris Hendrix, senior in business finance, came to K-State.

The band had a smooth start, as the two had been playing together since high school. Difficulties arose in Last Call's search for a female vocalist; Ferriter is Last Call's fourth female vocalist in the past three years.

"We had a few problems in the beginning, but then we met Erin through a mutual friend," Hendrix said.

Ferriter said she was more than happy to join the act. "Those guys are really talented. It takes them less than a day to learn to play a song they just heard on the radio," she said.

Over the years, Last Call has become a familiar name at local drinking establishments such as Bowinkle's Sports Bar, Rusty's Last Chance Bar & Saloon, 12th Street Pub and Rowdy Trouty's. The band's skill with giving someone else's song a completely different twist has fooled more than a few fans into thinking Last Call writes original material.

"We've been asked to record a few times, but we don't have any plans to do that," Oyer said.

While the band plays old favorites, such as "Brown-Eyed Girl" and "The Day the Music Died," there have been frequent requests for material from Pearl Jam, Dixie Chicks, Indigo Girls and even Adam Sandler.

Last Call's ability to play such a wide variety of music, from gloomy alternative rock to pop-country, gives lovers of different genres a chance to hear a little of what they want in every show.

While it might seem the band gets a lot of exposure around Aggieville, Last Call's shows have a certain element of fun that keeps audience members listening, which was apparent during its concert at Trouty's on Saturday evening.

"The Trouty's crowd can really get into their shows," said Bob Rein, bartender at Trouty's, as he watched an audience member stand on her bar stool and scream requests.

Another interesting aspect of Last Call's shows is the addition of guest musicians.

During Saturday's performance at Trouty's, an audience member requested the chance to sing along and a friend of the band's lent a hand in the instrumental department.

"We have friends that come and ask to play with us only once or twice a semester, but we love having them with us," Hendrix said.

After many semesters together, this semester will be the band's last. Oyer and Hendrix will graduate in May and move on to the business world. Ferriter might retire due to problems with her vocal cords. Oyer, however, said he is eager to pass on the torch to any other hopeful cover artists.

"I'd like to encourage other bands to do this," Oyer said. "It helped pay my way through college."

'The Faculty' a decent flick

High schoolers fight alien teachers.

By M.A. LOROFF
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

Most students have had a teacher whom they dubbed a little weird, but the students at Herrington High School in "The Faculty" truly have bloodsucking teachers.

In this sci-fi thriller written by Kevin Williamson ("Scream") and directed by Robert Rodriguez ("Desperado," "From Dusk Till Dawn"), six high school students must stop aliens from taking over their school and eventually the world.

The movie combines classic sci-fi tales such as "The Puppetmaster" and "Invasion of the Body Snatchers" to create an alien being capable of taking over the earth. The aliens are taking the world by surprise and are coming in quietly through the residents of a small town.

Someone, of course, has to stop them. Enter the six stereotypical high school heroes: the dumb jock (Shawn Wayne Hatosy) who wants to be smart, his prissy cheerleader girlfriend (Jordanna Brewster), the streetwise genius (Josh Hartnett), the sugary sweet southern belle (Laura Harris), the outcast girl (Clea DuVall) and the high school geek (Elijah Wood).

The movie begins when the high school football coach (Robert Patrick) becomes possessed by aliens and starts converting the school employees into his minions. Soon the entire faculty is enslaved by the aliens, including the school nurse (Salma Hayek, who has made at least a cameo appearance in all of the Rodriguez movies I've seen).

By this time, the six students realize something is wrong at the school and start to piece things together. They find the aliens' weakness is constantly needing to be rehydrated. This means the aliens drink water all the time; just watching the movie makes you thirsty. I suggest you buy a large drink at the concession stand before seeing this movie.

Once the aliens' weakness is found, the students know they can kill the aliens by dehydrating them. This can be done by using a caffeine substance that the streetwise kid sells to his schoolyard chums. The problem is the townspeople are controlled by one head alien, and the students have to find who the leader is before it's too late.

The movie will keep you on the edge of your seat and contains enough blood and gore to keep it interesting without being entirely too cheesy and disgusting. The ending is obvious and a little too exaggerated, but the movie is worth seeing even if you don't make it to the box office.

The soundtrack to the movie contains a lot of good songs, including a remake of Pink Floyd's "Another Brick in the Wall."

Booksellers, other retailers enjoy high profits from Clinton scandal

By JUSTIN VANNETT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

While politicians are trying to wrap things up in the President Bill Clinton impeachment trial, online booksellers and other businesses are making money as a result of the scandal.

All one has to do is go to any online bookseller to find books about the trial. Local retailers carry anything from books to unique novelty items as well.

"We sold quite a few of the Starr reports when it first came out," said Cynthia McKee, book manager at Hastings Book, Music and Video. "We have also had a few people ask about Rehnquist's book, 'Grand Inquests: The Historical Impeachments of Justice Samuel Chase and President Andrew Johnson.'"

Online book sellers have books and videos covering the trial.

Amazon.com lists five books and two videos directly related to the trial. There are 82 listings for books covering impeachment, from Senator William Blount, who was the first member of the U.S. government to be impeached; to President Andrew Johnson, the only other president ever impeached. Even those companies associated with the trial are seeing an increase in sales.

DKNY, Coke, Gap and Barnes and Noble all have received attention for their part in the trial. Monica Lewinsky wore a beret from DKNY and a dress from Gap, both of which have seen increases in sales since the Starr Report was released. According to its Web site, Gap saw an increase of 18 percent in comparable store sales in September, the month Lewinsky's semen-stained dress was released as evidence in the trial.

Sales of 19th-century poet Walt Whitman's book of poems "Leaves of Grass" are up, as are other books and compact discs mentioned in the report.

Many people involved are making money off the scandal, and that raises concerns for some.

"It's gotten too much attention anyway," said Amy Matlack, freshman in music education. "Selling stuff online is just another way to make money off what shouldn't have been a big deal anyway."

Program offers job training, personal help

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three years ago, Karen Hughes was working as a housekeeper at the Holiday Inn Holidome. With the help of the Single Parent/Displaced Homemaker Program, however, she received office-skill training and is now a receptionist for Manhattan Family Physicians.

"This is like a spin-off from SRS (Social Rehabilitation Services)," Hughes said. "The community needs it because so many single parents and homemakers have had a job, and this is a way to better themselves."

The New Directions agency was established five years ago to help individuals get job training and help in their personal development after their education is complete.

The Single Parent/Displaced Homemaker Program runs through this agency. Cynthia Shanley, executive director of New Directions, said the program enables those who have at least a high school diploma to receive help in résumé writing, interviewing and help with problems such as anger, time management and building self confidence.

Job training is also available through this program with classes at Manhattan Area Technical College, Cloud County Community College and Highland Community College. Single parents enrolled in the program are eligible to receive financial assistance from New Directions to pay for tuition and books.

"We work closely with SRS, Head Start and Even Start," Shanley said. "Anyone who they think needs help comes to us, and we teach them how to manage work, school or to get a better job."

The program operates through the Carl Perkins Education Grant, which helps the program pay for classes, child care for those attending class and mileage for those who transport other students. There are about 200 students enrolled in the program, and Shanley said 90 percent of these are female.

"I work individually with a person so they may achieve satisfaction in their personal and job life," Shanley said.

However, because of the restructuring of the grant by the federal government, the program is in jeopardy.

Shanley said the definition of a displaced homemaker is not as specific in 1998 legislation as it was in 1990. This means that although the same amount of money still exists, the state will control it. The program is slated to end June 30.

"Because of the new legislation, individuals will not have the services to assist them in getting past barriers and obstacles as before," Shanley said.

Hughes, who is also the regional liaison for the Single Parents/Displaced Homemakers Program, said clients still can go to SRS for assistance, but they won't receive the job training and personal development they would from New Directions.

"SRS cannot provide for a client the development skills, whereas New Directions can," Hughes said. "I wish the legislators would change their minds and let the grant be continued."

Shanley is looking into new legislation or contracts with SRS or the Job Training Partnership to keep the program operating.

"Without this program, individuals won't obtain training, education or support services that New Directions gives to reach a happy result," Shanley said.

Grant money buys laptops for police

Computers will allow officers more time in the field, less on paperwork

By KELLY FURNAS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Law-enforcement officers on campus will be spending more time in the field and less time in the office due to technology upgrades that allow them to do paperwork in their patrol cars.

The K-State Police have received grant money that is being used to install laptop computers into all four patrol cars. When the computers are operational, officers will not need to go to the department's headquarters, located in Edwards Hall, each time they need to fill out paperwork.

"It's to keep the officers on the street more," said Capt. Robert Mellgren, assistant director of K-State Police. "They will be able to do anything they would do in the office in the car."

The department received an initial $13,125 grant in October from the Criminal Justice Coordinating Council.

Last month, the department received an $18,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Justice's Office of Community Oriented Policing Services under the 1998 Making Officer Redeployment Effective program.

Six other communities in Kansas received COPS grants, which allow police departments to upgrade equipment or hire personnel to let officers spend more time for community policing.

The agencies are supposed to become more efficient, with officers spending more time on patrol. The other communities receiving grants are Cherryvale, Emporia, Garden City, Lenexa, Ottawa and the University of Kansas.

Mellgren said he hoped the COPS grant would allow the laptop computers to become even more effective.

"This is the first step of a long objective," he said. "Hopefully, everything will be put in the office from the car."

The computers eventually could be able to retrieve vehicle and license information — information that traditionally has been gathered over the radio from police headquarters. If this information was uploaded instead of being broadcast, it would prevent people from using police scanners to eavesdrop.

"It allows the suspects a little more privacy," Mellgren said. "And the computer system is completely secure. There's no way it would go online without the security."

Further down the road, the computers might even be hooked up to the national crime database and be able to retrieve criminal information instantaneously.

Mellgren said the chief benefit of the upgrade is being able to keep officers in the field.

"Officers can respond a whole lot faster if they're in the car," he said. "We're basically just modernizing our department to catch up with the rest of the industry. It's for the betterment of the officers, staff and the entire university."

So far, campus police have one car configured for the computer, although it still needs to be installed. Mellgren said he hopes to have all patrol cars fully operational by July.

"OFFICERS CAN RESPOND A WHOLE LOT FASTER IF THEY'RE IN THE CAR. WE'RE BASICALLY JUST MODERNIZING OUR DEPARTMENT TO CATCH UP WITH THE INDUSTRY."

CLINTON

In an interview, Daschle acknowledged the Democrats apparently have lost their fight with majority Republicans to conclude the trial without live testimony from witnesses.

But the potential results were still being hotly disputed.

"Once we say we have to have witnesses, then it seems to me we've given up the ability to tell the House or White House how to present their case," Daschle said.

White House Press Secretary Joe Lockhart said anew that the Clinton side is ready to argue its case without witnesses even though live testimony might bring "exculpatory information" to the Senate. "I'll repeat again, the one thing that bringing witnesses into this case will definitely do is extend and delay this process," he said.

Kyl, who said he believes other Senate Republicans would endorse his views, called Daschle's comments "totally inconsistent with the rules. ... He appears to say it's all or nothing — if witnesses are called, there's not much the Senate can do about controlling it. That's just not true."

The Arizona Republican said the Senate could reject witnesses and added, "There clearly were discussions in our conference about ways salacious material could be handled. The Senate has the ability to set limitations on that."

"I cannot believe the White House will engage in tactics that would deliberately and obviously delay the process. I think it's more of a bluff and bluster," Kyl said.

Meanwhile, fresh polling indicated most Americans are not impressed by any of the situation.

According to a survey released Monday by the Pew Research Center for the People & the Press, a steady two-thirds of Americans want it all to end with Clinton still in office and less than one-third are paying close attention.

The only participant who got even a 50 percent approval rating for his handling of the impeachment process was Chief Justice William Rehnquist — and only 19 percent could identify him by name.

After the White House finishes its presentation Friday or Saturday, the

Time magazine story spotlights Emporia's take on impeachment

EMPORIA, Kan. — President Clinton's defenders have often said his impeachment trial in Washington has forged a "disconnect" between politicians and everyday America.

"Disconnect?" asks Emporia City Manager Steve Commons in this week's edition of Time magazine, hitting newsstands Monday. "You make the assumption there was a connection in the first place. In the end we function on our own."

The east-central Kansas community of about 25,000 people is spotlighted in the national magazine, which sent reporters to the city to watch the impeachment debate from a distance and gauge public response.

Time reporters spent last week talking with residents and interviewing local leaders.

The magazine also highlighted The Emporia Gazette, whose headlines last week were dominated not by Clinton's trial but by a local grade school principal who was arrested on suspicion of marijuana possession.

The principal resigned soon after his arrest, to which the Gazette editorialized that he had "actually set a better example for our children than a certain scandal-plagued president."

"What was probably his last act as an educator — his resignation — may carry the strongest lesson," the editorial said. "Actions have consequences."

Senate will submit questions in writing to both sides, to be read by Rehnquist as presiding trial officer.

Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., and Daschle have agreed on a format that would divide the time for questions — limited to 16 hours — equally between Republicans and Democrats, switching back and forth between the two sides every two hours, a Lott aide said.

The questions will be reviewed by each party to avoid at least some repetition. Before each question, Rehnquist is expected to name the senator who asked it.

The trial rules provide for a two-step process on witnesses. Each side would submit a proposed list of those to be questioned in depositions — and each list could be accepted or rejected in its entirety.

In the second step, there would be a vote on each deposed witness to decide whether he or she should testify before the Senate.

Clinton's lawyers will use past testimony, federal laws and the Founding Fathers' own words to dispute the prosecutors' case that the president lied under oath or obstructed justice and should be removed for it, administration officials said.

Tiahrt honored by pro-life group

■ March for Life banquet will feature Kansas congressman as speaker.

By LIBBY QUAID
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Republican Rep. Todd Tiahrt will be honored Friday as an up-and-coming abortion foe during a Washington dinner following the annual march marking the anniversary of legalized abortion.

Tiahrt, a conservative elected to Congress in 1994 with support from Wichita, Kan., abortion opponents, will be the featured speaker and will receive an award from the March for Life Fund. More than 900 activists attended last year's Rose Dinner, held 25 years after the U.S. Supreme Court's landmark Roe vs. Wade decision.

The Kansas lawmaker "is one very prominent member of the upcoming generation of pro-life workers on Capitol Hill," said Nellie Gray, president of the March for Life Fund.

As a member of the House Appropriations Committee, Tiahrt in 1998 amended a major foreign aid bill to block U.S. aid to overseas governments that force women to be sterilized, have abortions or use contraceptives. Abortion foes and abortion rights advocates alike agreed on compromise language that didn't even contain the word "abortion," instead defining the word "voluntary."

The measure's opponents worried that it might prevent a woman who opts to be sterilized from getting free medical checkups or meals afterward.

Tiahrt also urged federal officials to investigate reports of taxpayer-funded abortions in the District of Columbia, Gray noted.

The appropriations amendment is a prime example of the watchdog role Tiahrt is shaping for himself on abortion and other issues that spark discord, particularly among members of contentious Kansas Republican Party.

"I'm not afraid of the debate, but we are a government of consensus," Tiahrt said in an interview last week. "I like to find things we can move forward on, rather than the things which hold us back."

Tiahrt said he doesn't plan to initiate abortion-related legislation this year: "I watch to make sure they don't sneak something in."

"Basically, I've watched to see that our taxpayer dollars don't go to fund somebody else's abortion," he said. "I think that's pretty widely accepted across the nation."

Saying the state party is "98 percent friends, and sometimes we think we're 2 percent enemies," Tiahrt said disagreements over abortion can be worked out in legislation.

"I try to be in the 98 percent," he said.

The definition of "voluntary" for Planned Parenthood International, that's a 98 percent issue. That's what I've tried to focus on, what brings us together rather than pulls us apart," Tiahrt said.

David Gittrich, executive director of Kansans for Life, the state's largest anti-abortion group, put it this way: "Rather than argue on an ideological level, he's very much more practical in applying it."

"Todd is up there doing what he knows he can do; he's not trying to reverse all of Washington at one time," Gittrich said.

That approach would benefit Tiahrt should he decide in the future to seek statewide office — an option for which he is laying the groundwork with plans to set up his own fund-raising committee.

Tiahrt is aligned with religious conservatives, who in 1998 lost several battles with party moderates, from the gubernatorial primary to leadership of local precincts.

But he maintains good relationships with Gov. Bill Graves and other GOP moderates, both in Topeka and on Capitol Hill.

Meanwhile, debate over abortion is likely to flare up this year. The Kansas Supreme Court refused to review last year's confusing law to prohibit so-called partial-birth abortion, which set the stage for yet another legislative debate.

The first Rose Dinner, held 17 years ago, honored another conservative Republican, North Carolina Sen. Jesse Helms.

Tiahrt said he was surprised at the honor.

"I didn't think they really knew who I was," he said.

Clinton speech highlights Social Security

By TERENCE HUNT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Clinton, standing before a Congress torn over his fate, proposed Tuesday to protect Social Security with the budget surpluses that Republicans are eyeing for tax cuts. He also said the government will sue the tobacco industry for smokers' health costs.

On a day of high drama that shifted from his daytime trial in the Senate to his prime-time State of the Union address, Clinton made no mention of the sex-and-lies case that led to his impeachment and imperils his presidency.

With the economy booming and the budget balanced, Clinton said America's achievements are sometimes overlooked in the clash of controversy.

Several Republicans boycotted the 77-minute speech; Chief Justice William Rehnquist, presiding over Clinton's trial, also stayed away.

Republicans, in their response to the president's speech, said the nation's business would not be hurt regardless of the outcome of Clinton's trial.

"Our country is not in crisis," Rep. Jennifer Dunn, R-Wash., said. "No matter what the outcome of the president's situation, life in America will go on."

Clinton opened his address by recalling the admonition of new House Speaker Dennis Hastert for Republicans and Democrats to work in a spirit of bipartisanship. "Mr. Speaker, let's do exactly that," the president said.

In the ornate House chamber where he was impeached one month ago on a party-line vote, the president was received with respect and interrupted by applause 95 times.

Democrats were most enthusiastic. Two of his harshest Republican critics — House Majority Leader Dick Armey of Texas and House Majority Whip Tom DeLay of Texas — sat stonily side by side.

Demanding that Washington reserve $4 trillion in expected budget surpluses to shore up Social Security and Medicare programs, Clinton said, "First things first."

In a new salvo against smoking, Clinton said the Justice Department will sue the tobacco industry. He also is seeking a 55-cent-a-pack tax on cigarettes. "Our children are targets of a massive media campaign to hook them on cigarettes," Clinton said.

Clinton also urged spending billions of dollars for new programs in child care, education, crime-fighting, the environment and the Pentagon. He also called for raising the minimum wage by $1 an hour over two years to $6.15.

"With our budget surplus growing, our economy expanding, our confidence rising, now is the time for this generation to meet our historic responsibility to the 21st century," Clinton said. "Let's get to work."

Clinton's speech came eight hours after White House lawyers began defending the president in the Senate trial, arguing he was innocent of the charges against him and must not be removed from office.

On education, the president said he would send Congress a plan that for the first time holds states and school districts accountable for their progress and rewards them for results.

Schools that fail to comply could lose some of the $15 billion the federal government spends on education.

In his remarks on foreign policy, Clinton said the United States will continue to contain Iraq's Saddam Hussein. "And we will work for the day when Iraq has a government worthy of its people," Clinton said. In the aftermath of the killing of more than 40 ethnic Albanians in Kosovo, Clinton said the United States and its NATO allies "are pressing the Serbian government to stop its brutal

■ On Social Security:

"I can tell you that one of the greatest concerns of our generation is our absolute determination not to let our growing old place an intolerable burden on our children and their ability to raise our grandchildren.

"Our economic success and our fiscal discipline now give us the opportunity to lift that burden from their shoulders, and we should take it."

■ On the minimum wage:

"The most basic tool of all is a decent income. So let's raise the minimum wage by a dollar an hour over the next two years.

"And let's make sure that women and men get equal pay for equal work by strengthening enforcement of the equal-pay laws."

Legislators want more details on Clinton plans

By LIBBY QUAID
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Kansas GOP lawmakers heard President Clinton's ambitious new agenda on Tuesday and said: The devil is in the details.

"It is, to put it mildly, all-encompassing," said Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan. "Sen. Kassebaum used to say you shouldn't promise more than you can deliver. We're going to have to sift all of the promises from the budget realities."

Clinton proposed to protect Social Security with the budget surpluses that Republicans are eyeing for tax cuts, and he urged spending billions of dollars for new programs in child care, education, crime-fighting, the environment and the Pentagon.

"Last session, he said the era of big government was over, and he listed 16 new programs," Roberts said. "This time I counted 24 new programs."

The lone Kansas Democrat, newly elected Rep. Dennis Moore of suburban Kansas City, said Clinton made a good-faith effort to get a dialogue going on Social Security.

"If they have good-faith problems with his proposals, they should come back with counter-proposals and not just take shots at it," Moore said. "I hope that's what will happen. Both sides have to come together with a little give-and-take and try to move toward

Task force proposal would add 2 boards

By KELLY FURNAS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nearly a week has passed since a statewide task force presented its proposal for restructuring the state's higher education system to Gov. Bill Graves, but members of the Kansas Board of Regents have yet to support or reject the group's idea.

The Governor's Task Force on Higher Education Structure for Excellence, created last spring by the Kansas Legislature, recommended the creation of two new boards to govern Kansas colleges in addition to the regents.

The proposal would create two additional bodies, including a board of trustees to oversee the state's technical and community colleges, and a higher education coordinating council that among other things would provide conflict resolution between the board of trustees and the Kansas Board of Regents.

While the regents would retain control of the state's six public universities, the state Board of Education, which currently oversees the state's community colleges, would be removed from higher education governance and only oversee K-12 education.

"The proposal is not the end of debate on higher education — it starts the beginning of the debate," said Lt. Gov. Gary Sherrer, who led the task force.

Among the topics still up for debate is the plan for funding the additional bodies. The task force proposal didn't specify how the new boards would be funded.

"At this time, the emphasis is on structure, not on financing," said Rep. David Adkins, R-Leawood, a task force member. "We still need to address those concerns."

The absence of a funding plan is one of the reasons the proposal has failed to gain support from the regents, who have not declared an official stance.

"I believe they were cautiously optimistic about the proposal," said Barbara Conant, director of communications for the regents. "They're still waiting to take a position."

Conant said the regents were concerned that the addition of two more boards might cause administrative confusion.

"There is some concern among the regents that if we create two more boards, they need to be able to solve problems and not add levels of bureaucracy," she said. "Bureaucracy and the budget are the two most talked about things."

Wildcat 91.9 FM debuts with new format, name

By LYNETTE ABITZ
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students might be surprised when they tune into KSDB-FM 91.9 this semester. Not only will it have a different sound, but it will have a new name.

The station has changed its name to Wildcat 91.9 FM and will feature a mix of modern rock, urban and local music.

Program director Jeremy Claeys, junior in electronic journalism and political science, credits Todd Simon, director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, for pushing to have the station student-run and putting an advisory board in motion.

"We wanted to move the station forward as an educational experience for someone," Claeys said. "Students now run the station from top to bottom."

Claeys said the new organization and format of the station allows students to have a laboratory experience that will help them get jobs in the future.

The specialty shows are gone from the station because it segregated listenership, Claeys said. With the old format, people were listening to the station only when the music they liked was on, he said. The new format will play a variety of music, and talk shows will run from 4 to 5 p.m. The station will be live 24 hours a day except for breaks when there isn't a disc jockey working.

Claeys said he will be meeting with campus organizations for the next three weeks to get the word out about the station and hand out applications.

The changes at KSDB include more than the format. The current location for the station is being renovated. Claeys said

'RACISM IS REAL.'

John Leonard Harris, of Harris Consulting Services, presented a lecture "If Dr. King Were Alive Today?" Tuesday evening in Union Forum Hall. Harris spoke about King's philosophy and how the world and individuals are handling civil rights today.

Speaker says race relations are as relevant now as they were in 1960

John Leonard Harris said he believes people should make contributions to improve racial awareness.

Harris, in his presentation "If Dr. King Were Alive Today?" spoke about the civil-rights agenda, the present state of race relations and peoples' responsibility in the struggle for social and moral justice. He talked about the philosophies and life of Martin Luther King Jr., and he brought the gravity of the race situation in the United States to the audience Tuesday night in Union Forum Hall.

"Racism is real. It is not a fabrication," Harris said. "It is as much a part of this land as the soil on which we live."

Harris challenged listeners to think of another issue of the country that was more pressing or relevant than race relations. "King wanted to expose the moral injustice of segregation in the 1960s," Harris said. "He knew it was against everything America said they stood for."

Harris said that more than 30 years after King's death, the country still is concerned with many of the same race issues. He said King would be troubled, but his hope and faith would never waiver.

"We have men being tied to trucks and dragged to their deaths because of their color," Harris said. "We have men in police custody who never quite make it to the police station. This is the 1990s, not the 1960s."

When presented with such issues,

Biology professor presents exhibits from sabbatical

Walter Dodds, K-State associate professor of biology, has traveled far and wide, but he said his ability to keep a fresh outlook is because of the time he spends with students.

"Interacting with young people helps to keep a viewpoint fresh," said Dodds, whose main field of study is aquatic biology.

Dodds will present "Habitats of New Zealand and Australia" at 7:30 tonight in Throckmorton 1014. The slide show will feature various ecological habitats Dodds observed during his six-month sabbatical.

As an undergraduate researching in a biochemistry laboratory, Dodds became interested in ecology during a college trip to Costa Rica. He said aquatic ecology helps manage water quality, and through his research he said he hopes to help clean water supplies.

Dodds, who has been at K-State since 1990, is working on a national comparative study of stream nitrogen cycling, with the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area being one of nine research sites from Puerto Rico to Alaska.

Dodds is also involved in helping the Environmental Protection Agency establish limits on polluting nutrients in streams.

Dodds said that when there is excessive nutrient input, nuisance species and overabundant amounts of algae can develop. Therefore, it is important that algae is understood, along with the functions of aquatic ecosystems and how human presence alters those systems.

Dodds said the research he performed while in New Zealand focused on helping regulate the amount of nutrient pollution entering streams.

"I hope to have a positive influence on the future by passing knowledge about organisms and their environments to students," Dodds said.

"Some of my students have elected to make aquatic ecology their career, and that is very gratifying," he said.

Judge approves agreement on proposed Indian casino

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — A judge approved an agreement between federal officials and an Oklahoma American Indian tribe, clearing the way for construction to begin on an American Indian gambling parlor in Miami County.

However, the state of Kansas is expected to challenge the decision involving the Miami Tribe of Oklahoma and Butler National Corp. of Olathe, Kan.

Mike Matson, Gov. Bill Graves' communications director, said Tuesday that no lawsuit had been filed by the state, but added that such action was likely.

"The governor is very concerned about the precedent it would set," Matson said.

At issue is 35 acres of mostly undeveloped farmland near La Cygne Lake, about 20 miles south of the Johnson County line.

The American Indian tribe and Butler National have sought for years to use the site for a $15 million high-stakes bingo hall that also would offer electronic pull-tab games that operate much like slot machines.

Butler would provide part of the financing for the facility and also build and manage it.

Graves consistently has opposed tribal gambling except by the state's four indigenous tribes, which each have signed compacts with the state to operate reservation casinos in northeast Kansas.

Virtually the entire site, once tribal land, has been owned privately since 1840 by dozens of tribal descendants and others.

In 1996, the Oklahoma-based tribe allowed those land owners to become tribal members. The tribe sued to have its new status recognized by the government and the site certified as tribal reservation land for gambling purposes.

The matter had been stalled in court for years over the status of the land and whether it qualifies under the 1988 Indian Gaming Regulatory Act.

Governor discloses support for new Kansas GOP chair

TOPEKA — Gov. Bill Graves said Tuesday it's imperative that Kansas Republicans have a new state chairman, and he confirmed that his choice for the post is former state Sen. Mark Parkinson.

Graves' spokesman, Mike Matson, said the governor said he felt that the present chairman, Steve Abrams of Arkansas City, must be replaced.

Matson said Abrams will be replaced when the GOP State Committee meets Jan. 30 during the annual Kansas Day weekend.

Abrams, a member of the state Board of Education, was elected state chairman last spring when former Chairman David Miller resigned.

Graves' endorsement gives Parkinson a strong edge over Richard Friedman of Great Bend, the former 1st District GOP chairman.

The endorsement came in the form of a letter the governor sent late last week to the four new Republican district chairmen.

The letter also endorsed Margie Canfield of Topeka for vice chairwoman, Wanda Morrison of Hutchinson, for secretary and Steve Martens of Wichita for treasurer. Morrison is a former member of the state Board of Education.

"It is important we all work together toward ensuring a strong Republican Party," Graves wrote.

"I would like your assistance in sharing this endorsement with interested delegates to the state committee," he said.

The letter went to Gary Schmidt of Pratt, 1st District chairman; Trent LeDoux of Holton, 2nd District; Shane Jones of Overland Park, 3rd District; and Ray LaBoeuf of Wichita, 4th District.

Moderate Republicans gained control of the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Districts in the November election, which gives them three-fourths of the membership of the state committee. The 4th District remains in conservatives' control.

Parkinson could not be reached for comment Tuesday, but he said last month, "I am interested in being state party chair and have spoken to the governor, and he is supportive."

Parkinson, 41, is an attorney who owns and operates two assisted living centers in the Johnson County suburb of Mission. He served one term in the Kansas House, 1991-93, and one term in the state Senate, 1993-97. He did not seek re-election in 1996. His family is from Scott City, but he grew up in Wichita.

Scientists might drop Pluto from 'planet' classification

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Pluto's days as one of our solar system's nine planets might be numbered.

Two groups within the International Astronomical Union said they are thinking about reclassifying the relatively puny planet — either calling it a "minor planet" or lumping it in with an entirely new class of objects.

"For at least 20 years, it's been obvious that Pluto doesn't fit," said University of Maryland astronomer Mike A'Hearn, head of the Planetary Systems Sciences Division of the International Astronomical Union.

With a diameter of only 1,440 miles, Pluto, the planet farthest from the sun, is smaller than the moon. And while other planets have roughly circular orbits, Pluto carves out a sweeping ellipse that frequently takes it closer than Neptune, planet No. 8, to the sun.

A'Hearn said he wants to create a new class of objects for ice balls that orbit beyond Neptune and call them Trans-Neptunian Objects. Pluto would be Trans-Neptunian Object No. 1.

Brian Marsden of the International Astronomical Union's Minor Planet Center said he has a better idea: reclassify Pluto as a "minor planet," of which there are thousands, then make it take a number.

The prized number 10,000 will probably come up next month.

"It's not a demotion," for Pluto to be referred to as the 10,000th minor planet, Marsden said. "It's an honor."

New Mexico astronomer Alan Hale, co-discoverer of Comet Hale-Bopp, said the debate is somewhat silly since there's really no clear definition of what a planet is. Besides, "a hypothetical resident of Jupiter would probably laugh at our calling Earth a 'major planet.'" crazy," she recalls. "But I figured the worst thing that could happen would be that the business wouldn't fly and I'd end up being a lawyer after all."

As President of her class at law school, Christy already possessed the leadership skills that entrepreneurs need.

Her publishing experience, however, was limited to editing the Stanford women's magazine aimed at African-Americans.

Christy convinced the magazine's president to meet with her, and his company agreed to help fund her start-up. Christy launched Latina magazine in 1996, and it was an immediate hit. Today, it has an impressive circulation of almost 200,000, but it wasn't easy getting there. One of the hardest things about being a young entrepreneur is simply the fact that you are young.

Potential business partners often assume you are inexperienced. "Nobody saw me walk into a meeting and thought they were looking at a magazine publisher. But I persevered. You have to be prepared to get over your pride and fake your confidence when you need to."

While there is a certain glamour associated with being the publisher of a major magazine, Christy still relishes the role of underdog. "Each milestone means so much more when you're a start-up," she says. "A major retailer just advertised with us for the first time. To a larger publication, it wouldn't be such a big deal. But when they agreed to be in our magazine, we jumped up and down and cried and hugged. Then," she laughs, "we ate ice cream."

As an owner of a growing company and Publisher of Latina, Christy has continued to nurture her dream magazine into a leading lifestyle publication, read by thousands of dynamic, educated young women just like herself. She says that she hopes to inspire other young women to pursue their dreams as well.

Age: 30
Career: Entrepreneur-Founder & Publisher Latina Magazine

For someone who is only 30 years old, magazine magnate Christy Haubegger has already put together a pretty impressive resume. She's won an award from the Ms.

Foundation (also given to Oprah Winfrey and Madeleine Albright), and Tom Brokaw named her one of the "most influential people of the year" in 1996.

So how did she end up in company like that? Turns out it all started with one simple question. "I took a few business classes in school with some great professors, and they always talked about the search for that mythical big idea," she recalls. "As a Mexican-American, I'd always wondered why no one had ever produced a magazine for Latina women. Then I wondered if I could do it myself."

Christy graduated from the University of Texas in 1989 with a philosophy degree and immediately headed off to Stanford University Law School. But as law school graduation approached, she couldn't shake the magazine idea from her head, so she decided to devote a year to chasing her dream. "My friends thought I was Law Review. Still, she figured she could learn what she needed to know pretty quickly. "If you take any reasonably smart person and tell them to spend a year researching an industry, they can become an expert if they work at it," she says. "All the data I needed was in the public library. Census data, information about the magazine industry, books on how to write a business plan, it was all there." In the meantime, she lived on the cheap in San Francisco's Mission District and did legal research to pay the bills.

Once Christy's business plan was done, she started to show it to people who might be willing to invest the millions of dollars she would need to launch a glossy publication. "192 people told me no. I counted," she says. "But most of them didn't slam the door in my face, and I was able to learn a lot by asking them how I could improve my business pitch."

Eventually, some good old-fashioned networking led her to her first big investor. "If you don't believe that stuff about using all of your contacts, you should," she says. Turns out that Christy's classmate's aunt's neighbor (follow that?) knew the editor of Essence, a

Award recognizes minority leadership

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The desire to work toward the goals of Martin Luther King Jr. is what recipients of the Commerce Bank Presidential Award for Distinguished Service to Minority Education said the award inspired in them. One student and one faculty member are chosen annually to receive the award.

Kathleen Greene, director of Educational Supportive Services/McNair Scholars Program, and Leo Prieto, senior in pre-law and Spanish, the 1998-99 Commerce Bank award recipients.

"This award is about promoting and recognizing people who work for equal opportunity for minority students in getting equal access to higher education," Greene said.

The faculty award was established in 1978 to recognize outstanding individual contributions to the development of quality education for minorities at K-State.

The student award was established in spring 1997 to recognize individual contributions to diversity enhancement among students.

Reggie McGowan, award selection committee chairman, said K-State always has been a diverse community where students can succeed.

"Martin Luther King advocated social justice and educational programs," McGowan said. "This came out of his main themes."

In order to receive the award, faculty and students must fill out an application in early October. A committee then screens the information, and the most qualified faculty member receives the award. The top-three students are interviewed after the initial application.

"This is a good learning experience to go through because students are interviewed as if they were in the job market," McGowan said.

Prieto, last year's Hispanic American Leadership Organization president, said professors and friends urged him to apply for the award.

After being a member of HALO, Student Senate and Sigma Lambda Beta, a traditional Latino fraternity, Prieto said the experiences have helped him serve as a representative for multicultural students on campus.

"This is a way to let people know what I have done," Prieto said.

"I never expected to be recognized for what I normally or always have done."

Prieto said the award ties into King's ideas of working together and making a difference.

He said the award is a step in the right direction, but the issue of multicultural education is still overlooked on the predominantly white campus of K-State.

"We have the ability to increase the diversity at K-State through outreach programs and resources already on campus," Prieto said. "It is one thing to get the students here but another to retain them."

Greene said she hopes to continue serving students and increase the visibility of services available on campus for minority students.

"I hope people will think about how to continue to make America a better place for all citizens," Greene said. "This is what Martin Luther King fought for and was his vision for America."

Prieto said receiving the award and being mentioned in the same sentence as King was a big honor.

He said he hopes students and faculty will realize everyone has differences and similarities.

"I want people to realize what an impact Dr. King has had on the nation and the society," Prieto said. "Everyone can make a difference, little or small."

Facelift crucial for downtown's survival

Allen Raynor, who has accepted the general manager position at Manhattan Town Center, said he is going to depend on his familiarity with the mall and the community to be successful in his position.

Similarly, Manhattan residents Frank and Barbara Tillman have purchased the former Woolworth's building on the northwest corner of Fourth and Houston streets. Among other things, they said they plan to use the space for the expansion of their local software development business, IBX.

Despite these strong moves by locals, downtown Manhattan is still in trouble.

The corner of Seth Childs Road and Fort Riley Boulevard might be the home to a new Wal-Mart Supercenter. The plans, which still are being reviewed by city planners, would do much more than just add a new store to west Manhattan. It would make that part of town the center of attraction for new businesses, as well as customers.

Of course, the development of west Manhattan has benefits for the city. There would be new jobs created, and it would add convenience for residents on that side of town.

The development also could come at a high cost. Emphasizing west-side development could erode downtown revitalization efforts. It also could eventually affect other business districts, such as Aggieville. For students, the commute to shop would be longer. It also would make it impossible to survive in Manhattan without a car.

There are solutions to the problem, though. The city and chamber of commerce must continue to make local businesses as attractive as possible and make revitalizing the downtown area a priority. There must be an effort to solve parking problems, both downtown and in Aggieville, if those districts hope to attract prominent businesses.

The recent leadership changes in downtown and at Manhattan Town Center are a good step. There will need to be a strong commitment from local officials if Manhattan is going to remain economically stable — on all sides of town.

No need for a Referee

Siblings give up arm wrestling for civil conversations

The holidays are over. Yea. My holidays this year were fun. I spent them in Southern California hanging out with my brother, Caleb, and his new wife, Sophie.

She's British; he's from western Kansas. Between the two of them the humor (and the accents) can be a little weird.

I had the strange and wonderful pleasure of watching my younger brother morph into an adult. Granted, it didn't happen all in one fell swoop, but the change is definitely there. He's a hard worker.

He's always been a hard worker, but now he's responsible. Caleb is in charge of stuff, and people trust him to get it right. He sees things through from beginning to end. He is someone I would trust to water my plants while I'm out of town. He has changed from being my twerpy little brother into a genuinely nice guy. A little conservative — but no one's perfect.

Sophie has had an awful lot to do with this, but it's still a little odd to see Caleb being a grown-up.

I'm not sure at what point siblings stop treating each other like invading hordes and start acting like grown-ups. I only have one brother, so all of this is new to me.

I think I noticed it first at dinner one night when we were discussing politics. We didn't agree (typical) and rather than arm-wrestle each other to the ground, we chose politely to bite our tongues.

One small step for mankind, one giant leap for my parents' children.

It's amazing, really, this adult thing. One day you're pounding on each other in the backseat of the car while on a forced road trip to Denver. The next day, or ten years later, you're discussing fixed interest rates and whether or not McCain has a shot in 2000.

Weird. I like it.

I think I would recommend this to others: Go home and make friends with your siblings.

When you think about it, there's really no reason why you shouldn't. You both know how neurotic your folks can be. You both know how old that ribbon candy is on your grandma's coffee table.

Use this knowledge to build a real relationship based on mutual respect, admiration and the fact that you both have dirt on each other.

If they have spouses, so much the better. Sophie told me some stuff about Caleb that definitely will be good blackmail material when they have kids.

Think about how freaked out your parents will be when the children they used to referee now present a united front. There is no battle at home you will not be able to win. If you are an only child, pick your own siblings.

I love my brother but it was always in an I-have-to-because-he's-my-brother kind of way. Now it's more because he's a pretty nice guy who I like knowing. Let's hear it for maturity.

'A day on' should be practiced throughout year

"A day on, not a day off" is the theme of this year's Martin Luther King Jr. celebration in Manhattan. Many of us grew up with Sesame Street teaching us what "on" and

VIEWPOINT

HOUSTON

"off" means, but what do those words have to do with commemorating the life of the Rev. King? Everything. It was King who taught our nation that freedom has earned a judicious day on, and he defined for generations to come the tragic lessons of a day off.

A day off to most people simply means they don't have to go to work, but people who are judged by the color of their skin rather than by the content of their character sometimes experience an endless day off in the form of unemployment.

My grandfather always said racism never has a day off. It goes to the bank when you are looking for a loan. It is in the eyes of judges presiding over a simple jaywalking ticket. It is the voice of store clerks in the mall. It is part of the street justice that comes from a police bullet.

The bombing of a Federal building in Oklahoma serves as a haunting testimony of a day off in America. So does the specter of life seeping from Matthew Shepard's battered body tied to a fence post along a rural road in Wyoming. Clearly, if we do not choose to have a day on, we will all suffer from a day off.

A day on demands so much more from us and holds so much promise for us. King gave us inspiration to turn our day on when he said, "The ultimate measure of a man is not where

"A day on, not a day off" reminds us that a Rodney King beating can happen to any of us, and it is our duty to demand that the eyes of justice come from more than a video cameras.

A day on is knowing that AIDS is a disease and not a lifestyle. A day on is refusing to believe that an American Indian team logo has something to do with honoring dignity. A day on is knowing that it is not the B-2 bomber and the stealth fighter that will defend the rights of the poor, gay, lesbian, bisexual or senior citizens. A day on is being a voice of conscience, an advocate for everyone's "life, he stands in moments of comfort and convenience, but where he stands at times of challenge and controversy."

liberty, and ... pursuit of happiness."

This year's commitment to commemorate King's life by turning his birthday into "a day on, not a day off," is a step toward protecting our constitution's pledge that all men are created equal. "A day on, not a day off" reminds us that a Rodney King beating can happen to any of us, and it is our duty to demand that the eyes of justice come from more than a video camera.

It is my hope that "a day on, not a day off" turns into "a week on, not a week off," and that weeks turn into years, and years into eternity. Then all of us will be able to sing with pilgrim's pride, "My country, 'tis of thee, sweet land of liberty, of thee I sing."

'Dog' on city hall's lawn threatens public civil liberties, must go

VIEWPOINT

SACKETT

Dear Editor,

I am writing this letter requesting that the city remove a sign I saw posted on the lawn of city hall. The sign bore the image of a dog. This dog appeared to be wearing a trench coat. Tan or beige, maybe khaki. I'm not for sure. I think he was wearing an investigator's hat, too.

I can't remember seeing this dog's name, so I'll refer to him in this letter as Dog.

I remember seeing Dog on stickers and coloring books when I was a kid. My second-grade teacher used to read books to me about Dog. If my memory serves me right, Dog always was preventing crime and encouraging children to do good.

In the stories Dog talked about a lot of things, but mostly about maintaining peace and order. He especially liked helping kids choose right instead of wrong.

Dog would prevent a crime and then tell schoolchildren how they themselves could prevent it from happening again. He even strolled around neighborhoods keeping a lookout for crimes before they happened. On occasion, he would organize neighborhood crime-prevention clubs.

I remember one story in particular in which Dog convinced a little boy who was about to steal a candy bar to pay for it instead. After that, whenever I wanted a candy bar in the grocery store, I would remember Dog and what he told that little boy. Dog made me think.

After I finished school, I practically forgot Dog and his message. Only on occasion would I see his face on TV or hear his scraggly voice on the radio. Even then, I paid little attention to what he said.

This leads to the reason for my request. Now that I'm older, I don't really need to be reminded of that crime-prevention stuff all the time.

It really bothers me that I have to look at that sign every time I pass by city hall. I'm sure the city means no harm, but I really feel that by having this sign posted on public property, it is infringing on my rights. It is forcing me to think about a message I don't want to be thinking about.

I realize that some in the community are really into deterring crime and doing good. Truthfully, I support a lot of what they do. But for me to have to be reminded of Dog against my wishes is unfair.

What if I were a criminal? How do you think that would make me feel? A little tolerance for other people who choose a different way of living in society might make this city a better place to live.

"Take a bite out of crime." I think that is making a pretty strong statement. Just because that message is consistent with how most of us live is no reason to force it on everyone.

My neighbor is involved in another crime prevention program here in the city. How do you think she feels when she walks by and sees Dog's message? She's never complained to me, but I imagine she is disappointed with the city's choosing to discriminate against her crime-prevention group. It is not right that Dog gets his message and his motto placed on public property while all the other groups don't have anything there.

I realize that Dog's message is nearly the same as most of the others, but that is no reason to discriminate. Isn't there some law that requires separation of crime-prevention clubs and state?

The city should take prompt action to remove this sign. If no action is taken, I will be forced to contact the American Criminal Liberties Union. A lawsuit is not what this city needs. I urge all citizens to join with me in my noble fight to remove Dog and his message from public display in this city.

Sincerely,

Lefty J. Liberal

Companies help preparation

■ 13 firms help students practice selling themselves during mock interviews.

By JODY JOHNSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A mock interview program is being offered to College of Arts and Sciences students interested in improving their interviewing skills.

The interviews, sponsored by Arts and Sciences ambassadors and Career and Employment Services, will take place Jan. 26 in Holtz Hall.

Thirteen companies around the country have agreed to participate in the interviews, said Tim Henderson, assistant director of Career and Employment Services.

"We have an outstanding selection of employers this year," he said.

Arts and sciences students interested in participating in a mock interview can bring their résumé to the Career and Employment Services office Jan. 20-22 and choose a company to interview with and a time to meet.

Students participating in the mock interviews need to wear professional attire. Dan Cataldi, mock interview planning committee member and senior in psychology, said it's also important for students to research companies.

"It's really helpful if when you go in there, you know what the company is about and what the company does," he said. "It will be more realistic if you're prepared."

Career and Employment Services will have lists of employers participating, and there are posters displayed around campus with employer information, said Kaytee Miller, mock interview planning committee member and sophomore in graphic design.

"A lot of people pick an interview with an employer in their area of interest," Miller said.

Miller said she suggests students visit participating employers' World Wide Web sites and the Career and Employment Services web site to learn as much as they can about the employer they will be interviewing with.

The first 20 minutes of the interview will be like a real interview, in which the employer looks at the student's résumé and asks questions, Cataldi said.

The last 10 minutes will be used as a critique session where the employer offers suggestions and remarks about the student's performance, Cataldi said. It also will be an opportunity for the student to ask questions.

An interview workshop will be from 4 to 5 p.m. Thursday in Union 212.

All arts and science students, regardless of their year in school, are eligible to participate. There is no cost for the interviews or the workshops.

Alumnus wills scholarship donation

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A posthumous gift from an alumnus will give K-State's A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications money to fund six to 12 full-ride scholarships annually, the school's director said.

After his death last week, a portion of Max Hollinger's stocks and mutual funds were turned over to the KSU Foundation to augment the fund he already had established for full journalism scholarships, said Todd Simon, director of the journalism school.

The Max E. and Jean Hollinger Scholarship already contained roughly $24,000, Simon said. Hollinger already had made annual contributions of $10,000, matched by $2,000 a year from his former employer, Dow Jones and Co.

However, Hollinger's additional donation could add between $800,000 and $1.4 million to the fund, Simon said. Exact figures are uncertain right now, he said, but the donation could become the largest nationwide to be given to a journalism school for scholarships.

The donation wasn't the result of old family money or a business empire, Simon said.

"He had no grand investment strategy," Simon said. "Merely for 40 years, he set money aside every week. What all our parents told us to do, he did."

Hollinger died before many of the specifics could be worked out, but his basic idea was very clear, Simon said.

"What Max and I had spent a good amount of time doing was putting together a program for full-ride scholarships. My main job is to put something together that's as close to what Max wanted to see," he said.

"Full ride" can refer to only books and tuition (about $4,000 a year), or can include extra benefits like housing, Simon said. According to foundation policy, the money will not reach the school until a year from the time it is processed.

"It's kind of a blessing because it gives us a chance to work on this program," Simon said.

A native of Chapman, Kan., Hollinger graduated from K-State in 1950 with a degree in industrial journalism. He worked for The Wall Street Journal from 1961 to 1983, primarily as the sales manager for its southeastern district.

Keith G. Duckers, a member of the school's endowment committee, graduated with Hollinger and said he played a small part 40 years later asking him to give back to his school.

"We both went to K-State as ill-prepared as most veterans were in 1946. Here is a typical Kansas farm kid that went to K-State like tens of thousands of others and always had a warm feeling about what happened in and around Kedzie Hall," Duckers said.

What mattered most to him was helping other students from his hometown who had an interest in financial journalism, Duckers said.

Samantha Sandow, senior in electronic journalism, was just that. A graduate of Chapman High School with a minor in business, she was the first recipient of the fund.

"He was an outstanding man," Sandow said. "After all those years, to be able to remember his roots, to remember where he came from, is one of the most generous things a human being can do."

Bears face surging Wildcat squad in Waco

Last season K-State defeated Baylor in each of the two meetings: first in the regular season and then in the Big 12 Tournament.

By NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After winning two games at Bramlage Coliseum last week, K-State's women's basketball team will attempt to win for the second time on the road in conference play at 7 tonight against Baylor.

The Cats, 3-2 in the Big 12 Conference, are coming off a Saturday night victory over Texas, a game in which the Wildcats' young backcourt of Essence Perry and Kristin Rethman handled difficult defensive pressure from Texas and led the Cats to a 75-68 win.

In an interview after Saturday's Texas game, Perry said she is continuing to adjust to the pace of the Big 12.

"It was a very physical game," Perry said. "The referees let us play a little bit tonight, and that's something that I need to get used to, playing in the Big 12 Conference."

Five games into conference play, K-State's guards appear to be gelling.

"I feel like I am getting in the hang of things," Perry said. "I just go out there and play with all that I have."

Baylor enters tonight's contest coming off a tough loss to the Oklahoma Sooners on the road. The Bears were defeated 86-65 as their play dropped off after a huge win earlier in the week against Texas.

The Bears, 1-4 in conference play this season under Coach Sonja Hogg, have three players averaging at least 13 points per game. The team is led by senior Lara Webb, who is averaging 16.4 points and six assists per game.

The Bears have five freshman newcomers and are coming off a successful 1997-98 postseason — a postseason in which, after being passed over for the NCAA Tournament, Baylor advanced to the finals of the Women's National Invitation Tournament. The Bears lost to Penn State 59-56 in the tournament championship.

Last season K-State defeated Baylor in each of the two meetings: first in the regular season 62-59, and then in the Big 12 Tournament, 75-66.

K-State leads the all-time series 4-2. The Bears last defeated the Cats two years ago in Waco.

Baylor, like K-State, has played a difficult out-of-conference schedule. Four of the teams' seven losses have come against ranked opponents.

The Wildcats are looking to continue the winning ways of their recent homestand. K-State forward Nicky Ramage said the team needs to continue to make progress.

"We're playing really hard and we're going to keep doing it," Ramage said. "We're going to keep practicing hard and improving every day."

BACKED UP AGAINST A Wall

K-STATE NEEDS A CONFERENCE VICTORY IN TONIGHT'S MATCHUP WITH COLORADO

After losing three of its four conference games, the K-State men's basketball team finds itself going into tonight's home game against Colorado needing a Big 12 Conference victory.

"Every game we approach is important," assistant coach Butch Hawking said. "This game is important because it is our next one. The Colorado game is pivotal game for everybody."

"We have our backs against the wall, but we have to be intelligent and play hard."

The team goes into the contest with a 12-6 record but has lost four of its last five outings, including a 65-59 loss to Texas in Austin on Saturday.

Colorado (10-7, 1-3) ended a four-game losing streak Saturday by beating Missouri handily, 82-63, in Boulder. The Buffaloes won with the help of senior guard Kenny Price, who came off of the bench to make eight of his 10 field goals to lead all scorers with 22 points. Tonight will be Price's third game after a clavicle injury.

With the addition of Price, Colorado is led by sophomore guard/forward Tyron Manlove, who leads the Buffaloes with 15 points per game and 4.9 rebounds.

Colorado is now the Big 12's highest-scoring offense. In 17 games, the Buffaloes have averaged 77.5 points and 7.24 three pointers per game.

"Colorado is a very athletic, transition-oriented team with a high-powered offense," Hawking said. "Their strength is perimeter shooting, and they are stacked with a bunch of talent. They love to score in the '80s or '90s."

Hawking said the game might come down to rebounding. K-State has out-rebounded 15 of its 18 opponents and ranks second in the nation in this category. The Cats have out-rebounded opponents by more than 11 per game.

Junior forward Tony Kitt ranks third in the Big 12 with 9.1 rebounds per game and has had 15 or more rebounds four times this season.

"They're a very good rebounding team, but rebounding is our specialty," he said. "Since they shoot a lot of long threes, there will be a lot of long rebounds. We have to gain an advantage, and be alert."

The Cats committed a season-high 25 turnovers and were out-rebounded for just the third time all season against Texas. Hawking said they must play smart in order to beat Colorado.

"We have to execute our offense, and play at a good pace," he said. "And we have to defend the three-point line."

"We are close to being a very good team. All our errors are correctable — just little things. We need to continue to work."

Despite its current struggles, K-State has not failed to put up several impressive numbers. The combined record of the Cats' four conference losses is 14-5, and they are ranked fifth nationally in field-goal percentage and second nationally in rebound margin.

At Bramlage Coliseum, the Cats have won nine out of 16 games this season and clinched a 53rd consecutive home winning season by beating Texas Tech on Jan. 9, 82-63.

K-State road outings are another story, though. The Cats are 1-18 all-time in Big 12 road games.

Last year against Colorado, the Cats beat the Buffaloes twice in three outings.

The Cats pummeled the Buffs 78-60 at Bramlage last year as Manny Dies scored a career high 28 points, grabbed 13 rebounds and blocked five shots.

The Cats lead the series 83-32, including a 46-6 advantage in Manhattan, but Colorado has won three of the last four games in Bramlage.

K-State's Ayome May breaks through Colorado's Marlon Hughes (left) and Howard Frier last year at Bramlage Coliseum. K-State defeated the Buffs 78-60.

Guard play will be key in deciding the outcome of Colorado game

By JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many areas of the K-State men's basketball team have come under scrutiny after the Cats' slow start in Big 12 Conference play this season, but guard play will be under the microscope tonight when Colorado rolls into Bramlage Coliseum.

Still looking for stability in the Cats' back court, K-State coach Tom Asbury should expect to be tested by the Buffaloes' potent guard play, led by sophomore Tyron Manlove and senior Kenny Price.

The two guards have paved the way offensively for CU this season. Manlove leads the team with 14.2 points per game, just above Price's 12.2 average.

Both average above 36 percent from the three-point range.

The duo proved its worth Saturday, guiding CU to its first conference victory against Missouri, an 82-63 rout in Boulder, Colo. Price sunk four of five three-pointers for 22 points, and Manlove added 13 points and seven rebounds.

"They have a lot of threats from the perimeter," K-State assistant coach Mark Fox said. "Price is a great player and great shooter."

"Colorado isn't as big inside this year, so they've focused a lot of their game on scoring from the perimeter," he said.

While the Buffs' back court was excelling over the weekend, Asbury decided it was time for a change at K-State.

Regular starters Chris Griffin and Josh Reid were benched at Texas in favor of Josh Kimm and Travis Reynolds, the first time the Cats have featured two freshmen in the starting lineup in more than 13 years.

The result was a season-high 25 turnovers surrendered to the Longhorns' full-court press and a 65-59 loss.

Fox said it was the team's lack of presence — young and old — that spelled defeat.

"We need to slow down a little," Fox said. "We need to play with a little more poise."

K-State's defensive poise will be tested by Price, whose range seems limitless at times. Last year, the Springfield, Mo., native launched 12 three-pointers in Bramlage, connecting on five, and finished with a team-high 19 points.

Still looking for a solid starting five, Fox said the decision on who will start against the Buffs probably wouldn't come until a few hours before tipoff. He said the recent change in the lineup was to search for the blend that equaled success.

"Our chemistry is solid. It's our confidence that's not as high," Fox said.

GAME NOTES

K-State leads the all-time series with the Buffaloes, 83-32, including a 46-6 advantage in Manhattan. The Wildcats won two of the three meetings between the two teams last year. The Cats had a season-high 25 turnovers in Saturday's 65-59 loss to Texas. K-State ranks second in the nation in rebounding margin, outrebounding their opponents by 11.0 rebounds a game. The Cats have clinched their 53rd consecutive winning season at home, an NCAA record. Eight K-Staters earned 3.0 GPAs or better for the fall 1998 semester. The Cats will be back in action Saturday at home against Oklahoma.

Without the lights, athletes' accomplishments are comparable to those of other students

VIEWPOINT

BRATKOVIC

The K-State women's basketball team is 3-2 in conference play and on a roll. Freshman shooting guard Kristin Rethman is one reason why.

Rethman emerged from obscurity on the Cats' bench and recently has helped K-State win some big games. She has stepped up lately and is attempting to improve while learning on the job, but she is still a diamond in the rough. In her first year at K-State, Rethman has had a lot to learn and adjust to in a relatively short time.

She has had to learn everything from a new offense to the pace of college life.

Her emergence into the forefront of the Cats' lineup has been surprising, but Rethman appears to be hitting her stride along with the rest of her teammates as the Big 12 Conference season begins.

She has a philosophy of just wanting to work on her shot, wanting to work on her defense and learning the system. Her attitude on and off the court seems pure and down to earth.

Sure, her desire to improve is what coaches and players have been saying for years, but it doesn't seem coached or thought out. It seems to come from the heart.

To the average crowd, Rethman is just a three-point-shooting machine who is lighting up Big 12 arenas and is opening up the Cats' inside game up for established players like Nicky Ramage and Angie Finkes.

After games when the fans are driving home and talking about the game, Rethman answers questions from the news media. As she puts it, it's all part of it.

Even though Rethman won't say it, she would prefer to do her job and be left alone. Rethman doesn't complain because she is doing what she loves to do.

Like a milling science major learning how to make flour or a young sports writer learning and hoping to improve with each article he or she writes, Rethman is doing what she loves.

Unlike the aforementioned flour maker, Rethman is in the spotlight because of the sport she plays. Women's basketball is not exactly as popular as football, but Rethman is in the spotlight.

Rethman is a symbol of what is special about K-State.

She is down to earth and isn't a fast-talking person from a big city. She hails from a small town in Kansas.

Her hometown has about 150 people on a good day, and her high school had about 350 people. She talks about her town with ease and has a sense of hometown pride. Her eyes light up when she talks about her hometown. Since I'm from Kansas City, that outlook is refreshing to see.

How many people at K-State do we know like Rethman? Who talks with a sense of pride about their hometown and wants to go out and do their job well?

That is what the members of the women's team are doing right now. They are doing their individual jobs well and are coming together as a team.

Players are stepping up and making big plays. K-State coach Deb Patterson said her team is learning, and they are improving everyday.

She is right. It is evident in watching them grow — not only on the court but also in dealing with the media and the pressures that go with Division I basketball.

I am not saying the team is perfect or even will win a Big 12 Championship. At this point, Texas Tech and Iowa State look pretty strong, but that is really not the point.

The point is these players and most K-State athletes represent the best in us. They are doing what they love to do on a lighted stage.

The average K-State student is doing the same thing anonymously.

It is also important to realize these are young people learning as they go, and they will make mistakes. In the meantime, they are taking it one day at a time just like you and me.

Nick is a freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications. He can be reached at ne8030@ksn.edu.

NATO negotiations fail; violence continues to escalate in Kosovo

By JOVANA GEC
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — NATO generals had six hours of not completely successful negotiations Tuesday with hard-line Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic over the escalating violence in Kosovo, a Western source close to the talks said.

A U.N. war crimes investigator, meanwhile, was denied entry into Yugoslavia for a second day and an American diplomat expelled after accusing Serbs of massacring 45 ethnic Albanians was given 24 more hours to remain in the country.

Only three months after Yugoslavia narrowly escaped NATO attacks, the Western alliance's top generals returned to Belgrade and had talks with Milosevic over the deteriorating situation in Kosovo.

The Western source said the generals were not able to convince Milosevic to live up to all conditions laid down by the alliance to bring peace to Kosovo but said, "We made progress in certain areas."

The Yugoslav president, however, appeared unimpressed by renewed NATO threats of airstrikes — unlike last October when he agreed to a cease-fire in Kosovo. Milosevic's security forces on Tuesday defiantly continued bombarding the Racak area, where the ethnic Albanians were massacred last weekend.

Thousands of people have fled the region around Racak, 18 miles southwest of the Kosovo capital of Pristina, and scores have been killed in five days of heavy fighting. A Serb police commander was shot to death Tuesday and two policemen were wounded in clashes with ethnic Albanian rebels.

The Racak massacre, discovered last Saturday, has prompted world outrage at Milosevic and revived calls for NATO military action to make the government obey the three-month-old shaky truce.

U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright said Tuesday, that the possibility of airstrikes was "on the table." In Washington, D.C., officials said the United States demanded Milosevic identify who gave the order for the massacre in southern Kosovo.

American Gen. Wesley Clark and Germany's Klaus Naumann said before

Tuesday's meeting that they would deliver a strong warning to Milosevic to end the onslaught. The NATO commanders also were to demand that those responsible for the massacre be brought to justice.

Their meeting with Milosevic lasted into the evening, and the generals did not comment afterward. They were expected to report directly to the NATO leadership in Brussels.

Since Monday, Milosevic's government has ordered the American head of Kosovo international monitors out of the country and has denied entry to the chief prosecutor of the U.N. war crimes court, Louise Arbour.

On Tuesday, the authorities allowed William Walker, the former U.S. ambassador to El Salvador, another 24 hours in Yugoslavia. It was not clear whether the decision to expel Walker would be revoked completely.

NATO international officials demanded that the Yugoslavs let Walker stay, allow a war crimes investigation, halt their crackdown, and withdraw military and special police forces they have sent into Kosovo in excess of numbers allowed in the October agreement.

A defiant Milosevic might be counting on the international discord over NATO attacks against Yugoslavia to pursue his policies in Kosovo, where government forces are trying to crush a rebellion by majority ethnic Albanians.

Any possible airstrike would likely require the exodus of the estimated 700 international monitors in Serbia and orders from NATO for military action.

In London, British Foreign Secretary Robin Cook said Tuesday that NATO warplanes could go on attack within four days if NATO chiefs agreed to that.

Top NATO officials are to meet today at NATO headquarters to discuss the Belgrade talks and the violence in Kosovo.

The latest Serb police actions followed several attacks by the rebel Kosovo Liberation Army and repeated calls by Serb minority in Kosovo and ultranationalists that the rebel Kosovo Liberation Army be defeated.

Milosevic's year-long crackdown against the KLA has claimed as many as 2,000 lives.

Shelling in the Racak area has driven an estimated 5,300 civilians into the hills.

House could begin day with Pledge of Allegiance

■ A proposed rules change would put the pledge after the daily prayer.

By JOHN HANNA
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — State representatives take several minutes each day at the start of their session to remember God.

Now they're ready to set aside a few seconds to honor the American flag, too.

A proposed change in House rules would allow members to recite the Pledge of Allegiance after the daily prayer.

Reciting the pledge is common for city councils, school boards, veterans' groups, fraternal lodges and Rotary clubs across Kansas. There is no record that either the House or Senate ever has made it a formal part of its daily routine.

"It's just one of those things that you're shocked we're not already doing," House Speaker Robin Jennison, R-Healy, said Tuesday.

Reciting the pledge requires a rules change because House rules spell out the order of business, starting with the attendance roll call. The House is scheduled to debate its new set of rules today.

"I've had constituents come up here and say, 'How come you pray but you don't say the pledge?'" Rep. Judy Showalter, D-Winfield, said.

Customs in other states vary.

Both houses of the Arkansas and Missouri legislatures recite the pledge daily, but Colorado, Nebraska and Texas legislators do not.

In Iowa, the House recites the pledge daily, something Republicans started when they gained control in 1993, but the Senate does not. In Oklahoma, the House recites the pledge once or twice a week but the Senate never does.

In the Kansas House, the change was proposed by Rep. Ed McKechnie, D-Pittsburg, a member of the Rules Committee. McKechnie also suggested having a member of the House lead the pledge.

"It's not going to be a contest to see how many Boy Scouts we can fit in the well of the House," he said.

House leaders said they do not expect much opposition to the change — at least not in public.

"Nobody's going to say anything about it," said Rep. Thomas Klein, D-Wichita, another Rules Committee member. "It's all underground, the grumbling."

Senators so far have no plans to change their rules to make time for the pledge.

"Nobody has suggested it, but I'm open to it," Senate President Dick Bond, R-Overland Park, said.

Rodman will retire — or will he?

By RICK GANO
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — The Worm took an unexpected turn. In another curious lifestyle choice, Dennis Rodman has retired — or has he?

Hours after his agent announced Tuesday that Rodman was retiring, the NBA's most outlandish player denied it.

"I'm not going to play this year," Rodman told Fox Sports News. "I am in limbo, but I'm not going to say I'm retired."

Once again — just like his bizarre wedding to Carmen Electra — it showed that nothing with Rodman is ever quite certain.

In a strange twist earlier in the day, his former coach, Chuck Daly of the Orlando Magic, said he had heard Rodman had been traded to the New York Knicks for Buck Williams — a rumor that quickly was shot down.

Rodman, whose multicolored hair, body piercings and tattoos made a fashion statement across the NBA and beyond, has become the latest star to leave Chicago as the Bulls rebuild after the retirement of Michael Jordan.

But is he gone for good? The seven-time rebounding leader who once donned a wedding gown, kicked a cameraman, head-butted a referee and dated Madonna is leaving the game, Rodman's agent said.

"Dennis is retiring," Dwight Manley said, although Rodman has considered retiring in each of the last five years. "He doesn't want to play."

"He wants to go into the sports and entertainment field. Some people have convinced him that he wants to become a movie star."

Manley got the news from Rodman in a phone conversation Tuesday and said there are several teams still interested in signing the wacky 37-year-old Rodman, known for his ferocious workouts and frequent forays to Las Vegas.

Manley, who said he is severing his relationship with Rodman, declined to identify the teams that are interested in him.

One team not interested is Chicago, which is housecleaning this week following the retirement of Jordan. Scottie Pippen, Luc Longley and Steve Kerr are all headed to new teams.

Rodman won three championships with the Bulls in 1996, 1997 and 1998, and two titles with the Detroit Pistons in 1989 and 1990.

Off the court is where Rodman marketed himself and became a marked man for his antics and ventures into poor taste.

He once announced his marriage, only to show up at a New York book signing in a wedding gown and blond wig — sans groom.

He offended Mormons and was fined $50,000 for making derogatory comments during the 1997 finals in Salt Lake City; he skipped practice during the NBA Finals last summer to attend a wrestling match in Detroit, and later as "Rodzilla" teamed with Hulk Hogan to beat Karl Malone and Diamond Dallas Page.

He drew a six-game suspension for head-butting referee Ted Bernhardt in 1996 and drew another for 11 games in 1997 for kicking a court-side cameraman in Minneapolis.

He was always in trouble, first with the Pistons; then during his brief stay in San Antonio, where his behavior damaged Spurs' chances at the NBA title; and finally during his three championship years with the Bulls, where he became a Chicago favorite.

Rodman had an uncanny sense of where the ball would come off the rim, in addition to the ability to tip rebounds to himself with his long arms.

And he was also one of the game's most bothersome defenders — grabbing, shoving and holding under the basket — to the frustration of his opponents.

Then-Seattle coach George Karl accused Rodman of flopping to draw fouls during the 1996 finals, but he also was quick to say Rodman was the difference in a grueling six-game series with the Bulls.

Rodman set various school records for shooting and rebounding during his career at Southeastern Oklahoma State from 1983 to 1985. He led the Savages to a third-place finish in the NAIA his senior year.

His jersey has been retired at the school in Durant, which also inducted Rodman into its Hall of Fame.

"It's helped us in recruiting," said Southeastern coach Tony Robinson.

"Kids are always calling, interested in the school Dennis Rodman played in," he said.

Robinson did not coach Rodman but did watch him play. Robinson described Rodman as tough and competitive as a student.

"He was, believe it or not, real quiet and shy when he played here," he said.

Rodman was selected by the Pistons in the second round of 1986 and spent seven years there before being traded to the Spurs in 1993.

He came to the Bulls in 1995 and blended with Jordan and Pippen to help Chicago capture three straight national titles.

The food served at the K-State Student Union will be undergoing a makeover with the guidance of a culinary chef.

Glen Cuchy, executive chef and a certified cook with Cartwells, the food-service contractor for the Union, recently joined the Union food-service team. Cuchy is the first chef who has a culinary degree employed by the Union.

Cuchy will oversee all food production, planning and purchasing as well as matters in other Union food-service areas. The position he filled previously was previously maintained by a production manager whose job was "less hands-on in the kitchen," said Paul Stolle, director of Union food services. "Instead of simply purchasing inventories and making sure the staff is there, the chef will stay in the kitchen and oversee the production of actual food," Stolle said.

Cuchy said he wants to incorporate his formal restaurant training into the institutional setting to create some noticeable changes.

"This position provides me a great challenge to turn this institution around," Cuchy said. "The cooks here are very conscientious and quality driven, but we want to take it up a level or two."

Cuchy said he plans to provide training for the cooks to help improve the aesthetic qualities of the food they prepare.

"I think the cooks and the salad prep and vegetable prep will appreciate the additional training I can provide," Cuchy said. "Most of them have been working in this setting for at least 20 years. They've been making the same style of food — institutional food — prepared in quantity for cost, not necessarily taste or appearance."

Cuchy said he generally will be changing preparation methods and adding spices and seasonings to bland dishes.

"Really, where you start is with the recipe and the methods you use and making careful choices so you don't use ingredients that aren't very presentable," he said.

Stolle said the Union renovations necessitate the changes in food service.

"We anticipate some reduction in sales during the renovations, since there will be a loss of seating space, and so much of it will be located in awkward areas," Stolle said. "Therefore, we think it's very important to change things around in the Stateroom and offer new products."

Stolle also said Union dining services will focus on presenting food to customers in different ways.

"Customers eat with their eyes," he said. "We'll be adding more seasonings and spices, and we'll bring in different cuts of meat. We really want to present the food in a completely new way."

The Bluemont Buffet and the Classic Kitchen Line are two of the main targets for change right now.

"We'll be using new commercial-type recipes instead of the traditional institutional or residence-hall recipes, and we think the customers will really appreciate the difference," Stolle said.

Cindy Snyder, Union marketing and promotions manager, said the changes being made are an effort toward improving food service.

Cookin' with some Spice

New K-State Student Union chef plans to improve quality of food

"I'm somebody who uses it every day, so I'm really looking forward to seeing changes both visually and in the flavor of the food," she said.

Cuchy apprenticed under Chef Felix Stürmmer, chief executive chef at the Westin Crown Center in Kansas City, Mo. Stürmmer is president of the American Culinary Federation and was featured on the Discovery Channel's "Great Chefs of New Orleans" program.

"During my seven years with Westin Hotels and Resorts I worked in banquet facilities that always produce high-quality, well-presented meals for as many as 1,200," Cuchy said. "This place is a lot smaller but provides some of the same challenges. My main challenge will be keeping food cost and labor in line."

Cuchy also was a restaurant chef at Steak and Chop House, an award-winning establishment at the Carvery Westin Hotel in Edmonton, Canada; the Sundial Restaurant at the Atlanta Peach Tree Plaza Hotel in Atlanta, Georgia; and locally at the Little Apple Brewing Company.

Credit approved; proceed with caution

Pitfalls of credit cards reality for students

By KRISTEN DYMACEK

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Almost every college student at one time or another has received a credit card application in the mail with the familiar, "You have been pre-approved" in big, bold letters at the top.

That application sometimes is filled out and sent in, and in a few short weeks a brand-new credit card arrives in the mail ready for use.

That's when trouble can begin. Many students use their credit cards on purchases ranging from books and clothes to groceries and gas. Then the bills start arriving in the mail. Students sometimes fall behind or are not able to make the monthly payments and end up in debt.

Michael Elder, senior in agronomy, has had a credit card for a year, but said he only started using it six months ago. In that six months, he spent $700. Elder said that when he first received the card, he intended to use it with caution, but his situation soon worsened.

"When I first got it, I thought I'd have it for emergencies only, and soon the balance was pretty high," he said.

Phyllis Harrison, counselor and credit card educator for Consumer Credit Counseling Services, said this is a common situation among college students.

"College students are targeted because they are a good market," she said.

Harrison said a lot of students don't realize that credit comes at a cost. She said that if there is a $2,500 debt on a credit card and the user only makes the minimum payment each month, it will take 30 years to pay the bill completely. With the interest, the actual cost would end up being $6,650.

"Credit is not free. You're really using your future income," Harrison said.

Jack Taylor, assistant director of Student Financial Assistance, said he has had numerous experiences with students who requested financial aid to pay off debts.

"We have had students roam in and ask for an increase in financial aid to pay debt, but we always tell them no," Taylor said. "Financial aid is only to be used for academics, and we do not make any special allowances."

Harrison said credit cards can be a good thing if they are used responsibly and students place guidelines on them.

"Students need to have a budget if they are going to have a credit card. They need to know what their income is and exactly what they can afford to charge on the card," Harrison said.

Harrison said there are several advantages to owning a credit card. It helps establish credit history, it's available in case of emergencies, it can be used for reservations and, most importantly, it's convenient.

"The disadvantage to credit cards is that it creates temptation to overspend and it provides a false sense of security," Harrison said.

She said students should have only one credit card, and they should set limits on their card and make rules on what the card is used for.

"Try to pay the card off in three to four months and live within your budget, and you should have good credit card experience," she said.

Elder agreed with Harrison's advice.

"Be very stingy with your credit card, or you could get into trouble," he said. "If you get it for emergencies only, then use it for emergencies only."

Movie remakes offer new faces, few plot changes

By JOEY ECK

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The old saying, "What goes around, comes around," seems to be proving true for the movie business lately.

Within the last five years, movie remakes have become increasingly popular. These remakes include movies of the past, now starring popular actors and actresses of today, usually following the same plot as the original.

The most current and possibly most talked about remake is that of Alfred Hitchcock's thriller, "Psycho," released in theaters Dec. 4.

The 1960 original starred Anthony Perkins, Vera Miles and Janet Leigh and was filmed in black and white.

Though critics say the film is not frighteningly scary, the characters, such as the killer Norman Bates (played by Perkins), are eerie in their mannerisms. The film has been noted for its excellent cinematography; clear contrast between light and dark make the scenes memorable.

The 1998 remake, directed by Gus Van Sant, stars Vince Vaughn, Anne Heche, Julianne Moore and Viggo Mortensen.

Many movie critics have rated the remake much lower than the original for its failure to improve on the original.

Yet, as critic Danny McClure said, "Perhaps so many of these reviewers do not realize that a large percent of today's moviegoers have never seen the original production in theaters, nor are they likely to." McClure said he thinks this is a good enough reason to remake any good movie like "Psycho."

Critics say the only thing the "Psycho" remake has going for it is that the big screen emphasizes the graphic nature of the shower scene, even though it is the same as the original. Also, the acting of the 1998 version is said to be better than in the original.

Another big blockbuster of the late '90s is a film many do not realize is a remake. Several versions of the story of the "Titanic" were filmed, including a 1915 version in Italy and a 1943 version in Germany.

It was filmed for the first time in the United States in 1953. Directed by Jean Negulesco, this version stars Clifton Webb, Barbara Stanwyck and Robert Wagner.

The plot runs parallel to the 1997 version, directed by James Cameron and starring Leonardo DiCaprio and Kate Winslet. In this version, an upper-class princess falls in love with a lower-class "Joe" despite the disapproval of the girl's mother; in the 1953 version, the disapproving parent was the girl's father.

The two films are so similar that one critic went so far as to say, "The young Robert Wagner even looks a bit like DiCaprio."

So, if Cameron didn't dream up his love story on the Titanic, and Van Sant's "Psycho" is the same as the original, some might wonder why Hollywood has even bothered to remake them.

It's quite simple, really. To get the younger generations of today to watch these films, the only alterations that need to be made are the leading ladies and gentlemen.

The directors know this, and they also know that for any movie to become a box office hit, it must be relevant to the audience of the day. Cameron knew this when he hired DiCaprio.

Making these movies accessible for the people of today's generations is perhaps the only thing that will extend the lives of these films for another 30 years.

Who knows — by the time our grandchildren are our age, the beloved Leo may have to step aside for a new Jack Dawson to carry his generation.

Clinton team begins defense

By DAVID ESPO
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — White House Counsel Charles Ruff opened President Clinton's impeachment defense Tuesday with ringing statements of Clinton's innocence, an attack on the House's "rush to judgment" and a fervent plea to the senators who will decide the president's fate: "He must not be removed from office."

Speaking so quietly at times that some senators strained in their seats to listen, Ruff declared that "William Jefferson Clinton is not guilty of the charges" leveled by the House.

Ruff spoke from his wheelchair, his breastpocket copy of the Constitution on a nearby table, a few hours before Clinton's delivery of the State of the Union address across the Capitol in the House chamber.

The awkward juxtaposition — a somber trial in the shadow of a moment of grand political pageantry — prompted some congressional Republicans to announce they would skip the president's speech. Many more said they would attend out of respect for the office if not for its current occupant.

In an opening statement, Ruff offered a point-by-point rebuttal of each allegation, criticized Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr for his handling of witness Linda Tripp and accused the House of "prosecutorial ... fudge" on one key piece of evidence.

"We will defend the president on the

CLINTON

White House counsel urges senators not to remove president from office

facts and on the law and on the constitutional principles that must guide your deliberations," he pledged.

Ruff ridiculed the House's demand for witnesses in the case, although Senate Democratic leader Tom Daschle conceded on Monday that at least some witnesses are likely to be subpoenaed. No formal decisions have been made, and the possibility of a sharp partisan battle exists in the Senate as the two sides address the issue in the next week or so.

Separately, Republican sources said GOP leaders were continuing to withhold judgment on whether to invite Clinton to testify. They noted that Ruff had referred to Clinton's own unspoken thoughts at key points in the case on which Republicans accuse him of perjury.

One Democrat, California Sen. Barbara Boxer, referred to the political undertones of a trial the public appears to want wrapped up quickly. A party-line vote on calling witnesses means "Republicans will go into the year 2000 as the party of impeachment," she said.

But House Republicans said there was no reason for the Senate to back off, and several aides suggested that by alluding to disagreements about the facts of the case Ruff may have actually increased the likelihood that witnesses will be called.

Unlike last week, this time it was the lawmaker-prosecutors who sat at their table writing notes as the president's counsel spoke. And moments after the day's trial session was over, they rushed out a written rebuttal citing several instances of alleged perjury by Clinton.

Rep. Charles Canady, R-Fla., said of Ruff's presentation: "He's done the best job with what is an inherently weak case."

Clinton is accused of perjury and obstruction of justice in connection with attempting to conceal his sexual relationship with Monica Lewinsky. He has not appeared in the Senate for any of the trial sessions to date, and is not expected to.

As has been the case since the trial began, lines of tourists formed in the plaza outside the Capitol hoping for a 15-minute turn in the public galleries. Among those in the VIP gallery was television personality Whoopi Goldberg, who watched bent forward, her face cupped in her hands.

Ruff's appearance in the well of the Senate came after a three-day presentation of the case against the president by the House prosecutors.

The White House added to its legal team, giving former Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., a seat at the table. But officials quickly retreated from a plan to enlist help from three House Democrats after objections were raised.

"William Jefferson Clinton is not guilty of the charges that have been preferred against him," were the first words Ruff directed to the senators, and again his last words. "He did not commit perjury. He did not obstruct justice. He must not be removed from office."

Ruff was biting in his description of the House impeachment process.

"There is not a court anywhere, highest to lowest, that would hesitate, if they were confronted with an indictment written like these articles, to throw it out," Ruff said, glancing toward the table where the House prosecutors sat.

He questioned Starr's decision to permit Tripp to provide assistance to Paula Jones' lawyers after beginning to cooperate with prosecutors.

The Jones sexual harassment lawsuit was the genesis of the impeachment case, since it was the decision of her attorneys to seek depositions from Lewinsky and the president that led to Starr's investigation.

Ruff returned to his theory of prosecutorial "fudge-making" later, when he said the House was wrong about its claim that Clinton had ordered his secretary to retrieve gifts the president had given Lewinsky.

Similarly, he said the House was mistaken about a key fact in connection with Clinton's efforts to help Lewinsky find a job, adding, "The prosecutors have got it wrong."

Under the schedule in effect, the White House is expected to continue presenting its defense today and Thursday, Friday and Saturday have been set aside for senators to ask questions of the two teams of attorneys, although the queries will be given to Chief Justice William Rehnquist for him to pose as the presiding judge.

The first two days of next week are expected to be taken up with debate over an expected White House call to adjourn the trial, and on the House's call for witnesses.

Under Senate rules, these debates will take place behind closed doors, unless two-thirds of the Senate decides otherwise.

Republican aides said they doubted that would happen.

California's law declared constitutional

■ Supreme court leaves three-strikes law intact after appeals by inmate.

By RICHARD CARELLI
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Supreme Court left intact California's three-strikes law, the nation's toughest on repeat offenders, even though four of the nine justices voiced concerns Tuesday about its constitutionality.

The justices rejected the appeal of a man sentenced to 25 years to life in prison after he stole a bottle of vitamins from a supermarket, a crime one California court called "a petty theft motivated by homelessness and hunger."

Nine-time loser Michael Riggs, in an appeal he wrote himself, had attacked the three-strikes law as cruel and unusual punishment.

In other matters Tuesday, the court: —Let Florida continue using the electric chair as the sole means of imposing the death penalty, rejecting a condemned man's contention that electrocution is a cruel and outmoded method of capital punishment.

—Rejected a bid by the nation's biggest local phone companies to ease their way into the $90-billion long-distance market. Three of the five regional Bell telephone companies had challenged the special hurdles Congress placed in the way of their offering long-distance service.

In the California three-strikes case, only Justice Stephen G. Breyer voted to hear Riggs' appeal. Four votes are needed to grant such full review.

Three other justices, however, said his case raised obviously substantial issues that first should be considered by lower courts.

About half the states adopted three-strikes earlier this decade but those laws generally have not been invoked often.

California has been the big exception. The state has used its 1994 law to put away more than 40,000 people for second and third strikes — a quarter of the state's prison population. About 4,400 of them were sentenced to 25 years to life.

Another exception is Georgia, which has sentenced nearly 2,000 people under its three-strikes law.

Washington state was the first to enact such a law, in 1993, and has used it to imprison about 120 people for life without chance of parole.

Justice John Paul Stevens, writing for himself and Justices David H. Souter and Ruth Bader Ginsburg, noted that California "appears to be the only state in which a misdemeanor could receive such a severe sentence."

But Stevens said other courts should determine whether California's law yields sentences that are so grossly disproportionate as to be unconstitutional.

"It is prudent ... for this court to await review by other courts," he said.

Riggs was convicted of shoplifting a bottle of vitamins from an Alberston's Store in Banning, Calif., in 1995.

When arrested, he had a hypodermic syringe hidden in one of his socks. He previously had been convicted eight times — four nonviolent crimes and four robberies.

"In this particular case, the sentence was not cruel and unusual punishment," state Deputy Attorney General Craig Nelson said in a telephone interview from his San Diego office.

"But if the justices were inclined to believe it might have been, they were right to let it percolate in the lower courts." In 1980, the court upheld the life sentence of a Texas man whose three convictions were for credit card fraud worth $80, forging a $28 check and falsely obtaining $120. That inmate was eligible for parole after serving 12 years.

The court in 1983 overturned a South Dakota man's life sentence for six nonviolent crimes, but his sentence carried no chance of parole.

And in 1991, the court upheld a life sentence without possibility of parole for a Michigan man convicted of possessing a small amount of cocaine.

The court ruled then that the Constitution bars only those sentences that are grossly disproportionate to the crime.

Other states with three-strikes laws on their books include Alaska, Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Indiana, Louisiana, Maryland, Montana, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Virginia and Wisconsin.

Most states have laws that impose stiffer sentences for recidivist criminals, but they do not impose punishment as harsh as three-strikes laws.

HIGHER ED

The regents had two representatives appointed to the governor's task force, including President Jon Wefald. Both of the regents' representatives voted for the proposal.

"We're creating another layer in the coordinating council," Wefald said. "Most states have a coordinating council in some way or another."

Wefald said potential conflict between the regents and the community colleges' board is exaggerated.

"I'm not sure they'll be battling each other," he said. "Right now there is not much of a forum for solving differences between community colleges and state universities."

Adkins agreed, saying the proposal was "intended to accomplish more of a symmetry."

"Boundaries between all of the higher education sectors are going to become more blurred," he said. "This proposal will create an atmosphere where collaboration is not only possible, but expected."

Adkins expressed frustration at what he called the regents' "wait-and-see" attitude.

"I recognize that the regents are suspicious," he said. "But if they embrace the spirits of the reforms, I think they will find they have more allies and more advocates."

"I would hope they would be active advocates and not just bystanders. They can't afford to be on the sidelines," Adkins said.

The regents would lose some of their responsibilities to the coordinating council under the proposal. According to the proposal, the council would administer student financial aid programs for both the state universities and the community colleges. The council also would coordinate the transfer of academic credit among institutions.

The transfer of responsibilities, as well as the creation of new bodies, will require an amendment to the state constitution, in addition to a bill. The proposal has yet to be drafted into bill form, and Sherrer said he was unsure whether the bill would be introduced first in the House or Senate. The bill would require a majority vote to pass through each house and then would require the governor's signature. The bill would go into effect upon passage of the constitutional amendment.

The amendment would need a two-thirds majority vote in both the House and the Senate but would not require the governor's signature. It instead would go straight to Kansas voters, who would need to approve it by a simple majority. Adkins said the amendment most likely would be placed on the ballot during a general election, which means the soonest the proposal could be enacted would be January 2001.

While the proposal has a lot of hurdles to jump, it is coming off of a strong recommendation from the task force. Of its 19 members, 17 voted in favor of the proposal.

The two members of the task force who did not endorse the plan were Washburn University President Jerry Farley and Washburn professor Bill Wagnon, who is also a member of the state Board of Education. Neither could be reached for comment.

The task force did not address the possibility of Washburn receiving state funding and coming under regents jurisdiction. According to the report, such issues of finance are outside the scope of this report, but the ideas will remain important issues for consideration. Also, the task force recommended Washburn have the right to appeal directly to the coordinating council, not the regents.

"Washburn would essentially maintain a status quo," Adkins said. "Eventually, Washburn becoming a state university is inevitable. But I understand their position. They want to be treated equitably."

was moving in the right direction on Social Security, national security and education.

"We're going to work hard to present him with opportunities to sign them into law," Tiahrt said. "We're also going to work for tax relief."

"So unreal" is how Tiahrt described the address from the impeached president to the House members who voted to impeach him and the Senators who are considering his fate.

"I think he probably should have just submitted it to us in writing; he's playing politics here, it has nothing to do with the legislative process," Tiahrt said before Clinton entered the chamber. "I respect the office and the president's ability to exercise it, so I'm going to stand and I'm going to clap, but I think his actions speak louder than his words."

solutions to racial issues. He said the first myth is that time alone will cure the problem. The second is that education will solve the problem.

"Not until we can read history as it really happened, not as the victors wrote it, will people understand what really happened," Harris said. "Some people call it revisionist history. I call it the truth. The history in our books now is what people should concentrate on, finding a leader within themselves, not in public officials."

He asked his audience to contemplate how they were living their lives and making a lasting contribution and said it came down to each individual.

City aids mystery firms with development money

■ Businesses plan to build in Corporate Technology Park near airport.

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Following Tuesday night's Manhattan City Commission meeting, it appears Manhattan's Corporate Technology Park will be welcoming at least two mystery tenants following a unanimous vote by the commission to extend money from Manhattan Economic Development Opportunity Fund to the applicants.

The companies are code-named Project Wadley and Project Mentor. Both requested anonymity, but several news sources have speculated from matching financial reports that the two businesses are in fact Western Wireless of Issaquah, Wash., and Steris of Mentor, Ohio.

Under the proposals, Project Wadley has offered to invest a total of $14.2 million within its first year into a 40,000 to 45,000 square foot support center in Manhattan and create 300 jobs in its first three years. The firm, which works in communications, engineering and technical support, offers employee benefits including medical, dental, 401(k) and salaries ranging from $8 to $11 an hour.

In return, the city awarded Project Wadley a $250,000 MEDOF Advisory Board grant in addition to its $2,703,400 incentives package from the state.

Project Mentor proposed a 40,000 square foot facility for its work in the medical equipment and sterilization industry. The company also says it would create 97 jobs over five years with a $900,000 investment for the first year. While Mentor also offered employee benefits similar to Wadley's, its lower wages starting at $7 an hour did spark debate.

Mary Jo Murphy, representing the Flint Hills Living Wage Coalition, said the $7 wage is still $1.11 below the living wage for workers to support themselves and families with public assistance.

"How many of these workers will end up at the Manhattan Emergency Shelter because they cannot pay their rent?" Murphy asked.

Commissioner Ed Klimek said such a company probably would have to raise its wages, even without city prompting, to compete for good workers with businesses like Sykes Enterprises.

"It seems to me they're going to have to meet market wages," Klimek said. "We have to up the ante or we're not going to get those quality employees."

The commission eventually approved the second project 5-0 to give Project Mentor $100,000 of the advisory board's money, in addition to Mentor's $460,500 state incentives package.

The high potential payback and job diversification were mentioned repeatedly by the commission as a rationale for their decision.

"When we look at what we'll be investing, I think it will be a good investment of MEDOFAB dollars," Commissioner Bruce Snead said.

repression in Kosovo, to bring those responsible to justice."

He also proposed $4.2 billion — a 70-percent increase — to dismantle and destroy Russia's nuclear arsenal and redirect the work of Russian scientists from weapons to civilian research.

On Social Security, Clinton's proposal sets up a monumental fight over how to protect the retirement program and deal with GOP tax-cutting ambitions against a background of $4 trillion in projected surpluses over 15 years.

The president's proposal would create new 401(k)-style retirement accounts for workers and invest some of Social Security's cash reserves in the stock market for the first time.

In sharp contrast, Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott called for a 10-percent across-the-board tax cut. Republicans also attacked the idea of having the government invest Social Security cash on Wall Street.

"No, no, a thousand times no," said Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas, House Ways and Means chairman. "If you thought a government takeover of health care was bad, just wait until the government becomes an owner of America's private sector companies."

Clinton proposed transferring about 60 percent of expected budget surpluses over the next 15 years — $2.7 trillion — to the Social Security account to keep the program solvent until 2055.

Twenty-five percent of that money would be invested by the government in the stock market in hopes of achieving higher returns.

"It gives a new face to the station," he said.

John Walls, freshman in broadcast journalism, did a talk show last semester and is now a DJ. He said the new format will make a difference because all the music will be incorporated into the main mix so everybody can listen to music they like.

Clay's said students interested in joining the staff can pick up an application in Kedzie 105. Applicants need to work at least a three-hour shift each week. He said they can work at the station as an intern or can get three hours of credit.

"We have a lot of applicants and they have a lot of room to learn," he said.

Drew Manche, station DJ and sophomore in communications, said the station essentially is going to electronics. The station will be able to record at a higher rate and interface with the computer. Manche said this will make things more efficient.

Clay's said there was enough money in the station's budget to cover the change to digital, but underwriting and working with the alumni help to cover the cost of the other renovations.

The staff is cleaning out the catalog compact discs. A CD burner will be used to compile them into a smaller catalog, Clay's said.

The station is looking into moving the studio to the K-State Student Union while renovations are being completed.

"We need to look at the fine print," he said. "I'm very concerned how he's going to pay for it at this point."

Rep. Todd Tiahrt applauded Clinton's general priorities, saying he

Wamego man enters guilty plea in sexual assault case

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A Wamego man charged with kidnapping and various sex-related offenses stemming from two assaults has pleaded guilty in one of the cases.

Larry Wayne Feathers, 43, pleaded guilty Tuesday to aggravated kidnapping, attempted rape and criminal threats for attacking a young couple last July near Konza Prairie Scenic Outlook on Kansas Highway 177, Brenda Jordan, assistant Riley County attorney, said.

Feathers was accused of holding a 22-year-old man and a 23-year-old woman at knife point and sexually battering both of them July 18.

Sentencing was set for Feb. 26.

Feathers also was charged last summer with abducting three teen-agers from Wabaunsee County and sexually assaulting them in Shawnee County.

He is charged in Shawnee County District Court with two counts each of rape, aggravated kidnapping, one count of kidnapping and five counts of aggravated sodomy, all felony charges.

Charges filed in the second case have not yet been prosecuted. That case involves two 16-year-old girls and a 17-year-old boy.

Clinton team says election should stand

By DAVID ESPO
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — House-passed articles of impeachment are "flawed and unfair," President Clinton's legal team argued before the Senate on Wednesday in a finely detailed, sometimes emotional defense that challenged each claim of perjury and obstruction of justice.

The allegations "do not justify the nullification of a free election," Special Counsel Gregory Craig said.

Craig and Deputy White House Counsel Cheryl Mills spliced together videotape, transcripts and even the words of House prosecutors as they challenged claims that Clinton broke the law to cover up a sexual affair with Monica Lewinsky. Accusing the House prosecutors of substandard legal work, Craig said at one point, "It is hard to take the charges seriously."

In an emotional summation at day's end, Mills told the Senate the house of civil rights will not fall if Clinton is acquitted. Clinton's accusers said that by his actions in the Paula Jones sexual harassment lawsuit, he sought to deny her civil rights.

Senators — some of them writing notes on legal pads, others struggling periodically against the urge to doze off — sat silently through the fifth day's presentation. By the time the day was done, Craig said in a closing aside, senators would have had much more

RCPD releases murder details

By LAUREN POSLADEK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Riley County Police Department investigators released more information Tuesday about the October shooting death of a K-State student.

Tom Richardson, 22, freshman in business, was found dead from gunshot wounds in his apartment Oct. 26. Brent Lawless, 36, a Junction City parole officer, was also found dead at the scene.

Shortly after the homicide, RCPD Captain Steve French said autopsy results indicated Lawless shot Richardson and then shot himself.

RCPD Investigations Lt. Herb Crosby said Tuesday police still are waiting for ballistic results from the Kansas Bureau of Investigations to confirm what happened.

"Three shots were fired at the scene — two at Richardson and one at Lawless. We sent the bullet remains to the KBI to be absolutely certain that all three shots came from the same gun," Crosby said. "We want to confirm that there were only two people at the scene."

At the campus memorial service for Richardson Nov. 10, his mother, Elaine Richardson, said Lawless was Richardson's parole officer. She said they met

Mann vetoes election spending bill

By LAUREN POSLADEK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Body President Tracey Mann vetoed legislation Tuesday that would have changed current codes on Student Governing Association election spending.

The legislation would have increased the amount of money presidential candidates are allowed to spend to $2,000, but would have changed the definition of a campaign expense.

In previous years, candidates could only spend $815, but the money they spent on articles of clothing — usually T-shirts — wasn't counted as a campaign expense. The bill would have eliminated that exemption.

It also would have imposed a $50 cap on campaign contributions and would have allowed the presidential and vice presidential candidates to use only $500 of their own money.

Mann said he didn't think $2,000 was enough, considering the costs of T-shirt production and other expenses.

"Two thousand dollars is not nearly enough — not even half as much as what a successful campaign would require," Mann said. "If you bought only 100 T-shirts, that would take up $1,000, and you would still have to spend money on signs, chalk, posters and other campaign expenses."

When candidates weren't required to count clothing as an expense, many would spend thousands of dollars on T-shirts and other promotional apparel. As long as they sold the items to supporters, candidates weren't required to report the money they spent.

Candidates were only required to report the T-shirts' printing costs, which Mann said is about 45 cents per shirt.

Business senator Nick Mueeting said he supported making candidates accountable for their clothing expense. He said current rules make it seem like candidates are spending less than they really are.

"The current situation was not adequate at all," Mueeting said. "I believe it lied to students. At least now we are up-front with the student body, and we have some control on what money is really being spent."

Mann said the legislation would be difficult to enforce; it would be easy to find loopholes in the new contribution limits, he said. And if candidates are forced to abide by strict limits, Mann said, that would give more focus to fund raising than to campaign issues.

MORE INFO?
Check Friday's Collegian for coverage of tonight's Student Senate meeting and senators' responses to the veto.

"There are a lot more loopholes in this system than in the old one," Mann said. "Also, this will add more focus to who can raise funds best in an election than to who can campaign best or has the best ideas on issues."

Student Senate Chair Gabe Eckert said Mann will address Student Senate tonight with his reasons for the veto and suggestions for amendments. Eckert said senators will have eight days to think about the bill, and can vote to override it next Thursday.

A two-thirds vote will be required to override the veto.

The original bill didn't include the limits on campaign contributions when it was first presented to Senate.

Mueeting said some senators were concerned that someone could influence elections if he or she were allowed to contribute an unlimited amount of money to a campaign. When the bill went back to committee for

City of Manhattan prepares for 'Y2K' problems

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The year 2000 is almost here, and the city of Manhattan hopes to be ready when Jan. 1, 2000, dawns.

To prepare for 2000, the city has prepared a time line to make sure its departments and outside services are ready for the problems associated with two-digit dates used in computers.

When computers were invented, calendar dates were identified with only the last two digits of the year because of space limitations and speed processing. Even though the space limitations don't exist today because of improved technology, some programmers have continued to use the two-digit date.

The use of a two-digit date will create problems when the year turns 2000 because computers will only recognize "00," which will translate to 1900 instead of 2000. This might cause systems to fail to work properly or fail completely.

To avoid these problems, the city has hired a year-2000 consultant and formed a committee to look at what it needs to do to make sure everything is year-2000 compliant.

By Feb. 26, the city plans to have an inventory of computer hardware, software, embedded chips and third-party services to see if they need to be replaced or updated in order to be year-

2000 compliant, Manhattan's Director of Finance Curt Wood said. They will label the equipment with stickers that say either "Y2K OK," "Y2K?" or "Y2K not OK."

This includes computer systems, traffic signals, automatic fuel systems, elevators, fire trucks, heating and cooling systems, communications systems, fire alarms and security systems.

"It's amazing how much stuff out there is automatic and has an embedded chip," Wood said. "The challenge is to go in and see what chips are date sensitive and which are not."

After an assessment has been taken, the city then will prioritize the inventory.

Information Systems Manager Gregg Gibson and his staff are doing the inventory of the main equipment that's connected to the city's network. Gibson said a lot of the equipment already has been checked, but they're just redoing the inventory.

So far, about a half-dozen computers have been replaced, and 50 percent needed software fixes.

"We may discover more as we go along, and our consultant may have more information that we don't have," Gibson said.

Gibson said the cost of replacing computer units averages about $2,000 per unit. They've probably spent $10,000-$12,000 so far, in addition to the cost of sending staff out to check the equipment but, Gibson said, it was worth it.

"There's not much of a choice," Gibson said.

Some computer units would be replaced anyway, Gibson said.

Besides making sure everything in the city departments are year-2000 compliant, Wood said it is important that outside vendors also are compliant.

"What we don't know and what we need to find out is where our third-party vendors are at," he said.

Third-party vendors would include the Riley County Police Department, KPL Gas Service and any other outside service providers.

"All our computers might be Y2K compliant, but if we don't have electricity, then it doesn't matter," Wood said.

"We depend on a lot of outside service providers to perform services on our behalf. Everything is so interdependent," he said.

If the city didn't prepare properly, many things could go wrong on Jan. 1, 2000, Wood said.

Building systems and traffic signals malfunctioning or not working at all are among the problems.

"We really don't know what to believe so we have to plan," Wood said. "Better to be safe than sorry."

City Manager Gary Greer said the city has been internally going through its computers for the last couple of years, and he said he is confident the city will be prepared.

"I guarantee the city will be ready by the year 2000," he said. "I think as far as the city is concerned, we're pledged to make sure the public's lives aren't interrupted from any kind of glitch from a city operation."

Gibson said people shouldn't panic about year 2000.

"It's a real problem, but I don't think people need to panic or have chaos about it, but should be aware of it and the potential problems," he said.

Gibson said if something is low-risk, like a family computer devoted primarily to computer games, don't spend a lot of time or money fixing it.

"I think people have to use a little common sense about it," he said.

There are rumors of people building shelters and cabins in the mountains, but that isn't the answer, Gibson said. "Two million people can't do that," he said.

Wood said it is important that people become informed.

"The government needs to take the lead to educate the public so there isn't that panic," Wood said.

"Until the public has a level of confidence, these kind of extreme reactions will occur," he said.

Greenspan doubts stability, Social Security investment

WASHINGTON, D.C. — In an address to the House Ways and Means Committee on Wednesday, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan offered his opinion on President Clinton's plan for Social Security.

Greenspan, an influential voice to whom Congress often turns on economic matters, said he supported Clinton's proposal to put 62 percent of the government's budget surpluses into the Social Security trust fund.

He said he opposed Clinton's plan to have a government board direct about a quarter of those savings — more than $600 billion over 15 years — into stock investments. It's not feasible to insulate such a board from political influence completely, he said.

Greenspan told lawmakers he saw three primary threats to the U.S. economy — a mushrooming trade deficit caused by spreading recessions overseas, a potentially inflationary shortage of workers and an unsustainably high stock market.

Republicans on the House Ways and Means Committee sought his endorsement of an across-the-board 10-percent tax cut. Greenspan said he preferred using surpluses to reduce the $5.5 trillion national debt. But, he said, a tax cut was far preferable to a spending increase, and an across-the-board cut was a relatively simple way to do it.

Kansans urge Senate to lift agricultural trade sanctions

TOPEKA — The Kansas Senate Agriculture Committee endorsed a resolution Wednesday urging Congress to remove trade sanctions on U.S. agricultural exports.

It also threw its support behind a resolution urging U.S. Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman to take greater advantage of the Export Enhancement Program, which makes the price of agricultural exports more competitive globally by paying subsidies to American farmers.

Both resolutions would be sent to Glickman, President Clinton and members of the Kansas congressional delegation.

"Expanding export markets and halting sanctions are keys that are vital to the prosperity, perhaps even the survival, of the American farmer and certainly the Kansas farmer," said Gary Hall, president of the Kansas Farm Bureau.

Hall said he was disappointed when he learned the U.S. Agriculture Department had not been spending all the money allotted to the Export Enhancement Program.

The other resolution calls on Congress to remove trade sanctions affecting U.S. agricultural exports and oppose sanctions other countries place on American exports.

"There are a number of countries that are putting sanctions on us, and I don't think the Clinton administration is doing enough to break down those international trade barriers," Sen. Tim Huelskamp, R-Fowler, said.

Huelskamp said he particularly is concerned about a European Union ban on beef containing growth hormones.

Agriculture Committee Chairman Steve Morris, R-Hugoton, said he expects the Senate to pass the resolutions next week. They would then go to the House for consideration.

Police discover fake ID operation at KU fraternity

LAWRENCE — Lawrence police seized equipment used to make fake driver's licenses at the University of Kansas chapter of the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity.

While searching the Alpha Tau Omega house during a burglary investigation, police discovered an open room that had six false driver's licenses and identification cards, police said. They obtained a search warrant Saturday and seized the cards, laminating supplies, a computer and other equipment.

Craig Hartman, president of KU's Alpha Tau Omega chapter, said the chapter terminated the pledge of the freshman in whose room the equipment was found.

"This was not a house operation," Hartman said. "The house had no knowledge this was going on; it was confined to one room. From what I've learned, this wasn't any elaborate ID-making scheme."

Rob Bensman, president of the K-State chapter of Alpha Tau Omega, said he was surprised but amused after hearing about the incident. He said this is not the first time actions by the KU chapter have been called into question, but could not offer specifics.

"That's crazy. I can't believe that. Those guys are getting in too much trouble," he said.

Bensman said the K-State chapter does not have much interaction with the KU chapter, and this incident would not affect the K-State chapter in any way.

"They send some guys to National Congress and National Leadership Conference that we go to once a year," Bensman said. "On football game days, some guys might stay here or we might stay there, but we have never had any fraternity sponsored events together since I've been here."

Sgt. George Wheeler described the licenses as medium-quality because they lacked the holograms and crisp lettering of genuine licenses.

"Unfortunately, it wasn't one of the computers we were looking for," Wheeler said.

In early December, a camera, several computers and supplies were stolen from the Kansas Driver's License Bureau in Olathe. A burglar entered the building without setting off an alarm. Police said they found no sign of forced entry.

Because the stolen supplies were made for the state, fake documents made from them would look real. Police said they suspected that the equipment would turn up on a college campus.

No one has been arrested in either case.

Study finds no evidence fiber prevents colon cancer

Contradicting years of dietary wisdom, study found no evidence that eating lots of high-fiber foods like bran, beans and whole wheat bread does anything to lower the risk of colon cancer.

Previous studies have found that a diet rich in fruits, vegetables and whole grains has other health benefits, including reducing the risk of heart disease, high blood pressure and certain types of diabetes.

The study, published in today's New England Journal of Medicine, tracked the colon and rectal health of 88,757 women who participated in the Harvard-based Nurses Health Study over 16 years. It is one of the biggest cancer studies of its kind ever undertaken.

From 1980 to 1996, 787 of the women developed cancer of the colon or the rectum. The risk was the same regardless of how much fiber they ate. The researchers said they believe the findings apply to men as well.

Dr. Charles S. Fuchs and his colleagues at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, Brigham and Women's Hospital and Harvard Medical School said they were astounded to find that women who ate low-fiber foods were no more likely to develop colon cancer than those who stuck to bran muffins and broccoli.

"As a practicing physician and as a researcher, this is a hypothesis that has stood the test of time," Fuchs said. "There has been such an abundant enthusiasm for this hypothesis, so the important message here is that fiber, overall, has no protective effect."

NATO takes military action to combat fighting in Kosovo

By JEFFREY ULBRICH
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRUSSELS, Belgium — NATO ambassadors dispatched frigates, destroyers and planes closer to Yugoslavia on Wednesday after hard-line Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic rebuffed their demands to halt the fighting in Kosovo.

Still, they sought a diplomatic solution to defuse the crisis — a position underlined by U.S. Secretary of Defense William Cohen, who warned separatists in Kosovo not to expect NATO to do their bidding on the battlefield.

Nato doesn't intend to be an air force for the Kosovo Liberation Army," Cohen said at a news conference in Washington, D. C., urging both sides to stop violating last October's cease-fire agreement.

Meanwhile, new fighting erupted Wednesday in northern Kosovo between Serb police and ethnic Albanians fighting to secede from Yugoslavia, killing at least two rebels and leaving a Serb mother and her two children injured.

Milosevic staved off NATO airstrikes last October with a last-minute promise to reduce Serb forces in Kosovo, but he is not listening to the West this time.

"We were not surprised, but we were disappointed by the very stubborn and obdurate reaction we encountered in Belgrade," Gen. Wesley Clark, the allied commander in Europe, said Wednesday after 7 1/2 hours of talks that he and Gen. Klaus Naumann had a day earlier with Milosevic.

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright will go to London and Paris next week to discuss Kosovo, among other concerns.

The 16 NATO ambassadors said after a meeting of the North Atlantic Council that they had not given up on a diplomatic solution for Kosovo. Nonetheless, they made precautionary military moves.

They shortened pilots' readiness time for airstrikes from 96 to 48 hours and moved NATO's Strike Force South, which includes the American carrier USS Enterprise, from the Aegean into the Adriatic Sea, closer to Yugoslavia.

NATO commanders also positioned six frigates and two destroyers in the Italian port of Brindisi, opposite Yugoslavia.

More than 400 allied aircraft remain on standby under an activation order from October that was never rescinded, including 200 planes that are under NATO command.

It was only under the threat of NATO airstrikes that Milosevic halted his offensive in October.

In addition, at least 5,300 people have been driven from their homes by fighting in the last week.

Louise Arbour, the chief U.N. war crimes prosecutor, abandoned her effort to investigate that massacre Wednesday after being refused permission to enter Kosovo by Yugoslav authorities.

The problem of what to do next about Kosovo bedevils NATO.

"There is an increasing degree of acceptance that NATO has to make the next move," said a senior NATO diplomat, speaking on condition of anonymity.

NATO simply can't take military action without a viable strategy.

There are other dangers too. About 750 monitors from the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe patrol Kosovo. Airstrikes could put their lives in danger.

"We've always said that there has to be a solution to this through peace, through dialogue," Clark said. "The facts on the ground indicate that he (Milosevic) may feel otherwise."

Clark and Naumann went to Belgrade on Tuesday to warn Milosevic of the gravity of the situation.

Milosevic was unimpressed, saying no pressure from outside could dissuade him from his legitimate right to fight terrorism.

The Council is demanding that Milosevic comply with his commitments to the 16-nation NATO and the 54-member OSCE as well as U.N. Security Council resolutions.

They include reducing Yugoslav army and police forces in Kosovo and cooperating with the International Criminal Tribunal for Yugoslavia.

They also hope to reinstate U.S. envoy William Walker, head of the OSCE monitoring mission, who publicly accused the Serbs of massacring 45 ethnic Albanians last week in Racak.

New economic opportunity pops up for Southeast Kansas' farmers

■ K-State professors find fun way for farmers to reap benefits from growing corn

By AMANDA EWING
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The smell is unmistakable. Once the tiny explosions begin, everyone within a small radius knows what has happened. The smell of hot butter, salt and corn fills the air.

Popcorn has a way of drawing a crowd. It is consumed in large quantities at movies, ball games and in the comfort of homes. In fact, Americans consume 1.12 billion pounds of popcorn each year.

With such a large market, popcorn has the potential to be an important crop, and Chuck Marr, professor of horticulture, is trying to see if Kansas can reap some of the benefits.

Marr and Dan Sweeney, also a professor of horticulture, have been researching popcorn and how well it grows in Kansas. The research started in 1995 and is ongoing at the Southeast Agricultural Research Center in Parsons, Kan.

The yellow-kernel popcorn, which Marr calls standard theater popcorn, is grown on an acre and a half of land with 15,000 to 25,000 plots per acre. Sweeney, who works at the research center, said the seeds are planted with an air planter and are grown just like regular field corn.

Part of the research centers on how well the popcorn grows in areas of limited irrigation. Since southeast Kansas does not have an aquifer like western Kansas, Sweeney said irrigation is limited to small ponds and some rivers.

"The southeast part of the state has unique characteristics," Marr said. "The farms are usually smaller, there's less water and the farmers are usually interested in more of a minimal input system without heavy inputs of water and fertilizer."

After the popcorn is harvested, Marr pops the corn at K-State to test its popability, which measures how well it pops and its volume, and checks to see if it pops into big, full kernels. The leftover corn is either eaten or given away.

"When you start popping corn in a large building, you get a lot of lookers into the lab," Marr said.

Marr said data still is being collected, and after this year's numbers are calculated they will have a better idea of where their research stands.

"At this point the object isn't to go out and beat the drums on a new product," Marr said. "We're trying to tabulate a set of data to provide growers with alternatives so they can decide if this is a good alternative for them."

One problem that popcorn faces in Kansas is marketability. Marr said there isn't a large market for selling popcorn.

"With conventional agricultural crops, you can grow them, dump them at the elevator and get your money," Marr said. "There is not that type of market for popcorn. The grower must establish his own marketing system. Popcorn falls into one of those crops that have to be hustled."

Marr and Sweeney both said the intent of the research isn't to take over traditional Kansas crops. The purpose is to provide farmers with alternatives.

"Our goal isn't to decrease the acreage of wheat with popcorn," Marr said. "Our intent is to provide growers an option."

Barnett leaves Northwestern for Colorado

By JOHN MOSSMAN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOULDER, Colo. — Gary Barnett, who led a turnaround of the Northwestern football program that included an appearance in the Rose Bowl, was hired as coach at Colorado on Wednesday.

Colorado Athletic Director Dick Sharp said Barnett's hiring is subject to the approval of the university's Board of Regents, which will meet today to discuss the matter.

If the board approves the hiring, as expected, Barnett was scheduled to be introduced during a press conference on Friday.

Barnett, 52, said he planned to meet with the current Colorado team today, as well as assemble his staff and familiarize himself with the status of Colorado's recruiting effort.

"I'm pleased to bring forward to the board an individual who is deeply committed to young people and the University of Colorado," Sharp said Wednesday.

Barnett, returning to the school where he was an assistant for eight seasons under Bill McCartney, replaces Rick Neuheisel, who left Colorado Jan. 9 to coach Washington at $1 million a year.

Barnett was Sharp's original choice last week, but when negotiations broke down, the Buffaloes turned to Denver Broncos offensive coordinator Gary Kubiak. Kubiak turned down the offer on Monday, and Sharp renewed his campaign to woo Barnett.

Barnett had nine years remaining on an 11-year contract he signed with Northwestern in 1996. An expensive buyout clause in his contract apparently was a stumbling block in the original talks with Colorado.

In seven seasons at Northwestern, Barnett compiled a 35-45-1 record, including a 3-9 record in 1998. He took over a perennial cellar-dweller, however, and guided the team to two conference titles and a Rose Bowl appearance after the 1995 season.

Before Barnett arrived, Northwestern failed to win more than four games in a season since 1971.

Barnett has been a hot coaching commodity in recent years. His name was mentioned in connection with openings at Georgia, Texas, UCLA, Notre Dame and Oklahoma.

His only other head-coaching job was at Fort Lewis, a Division II school in Durango, Colo., where he had an 8-11-1 record in 1982-83.

Colorado players applauded the hiring.

"This is a huge load off," quarterback Mike Moschetti said. "He is a hell of a coach."

"Just getting a coach this time of the year is important for recruiting efforts."

It is exciting to get a guy who has been a Buffalo before.

He was part of the national championship team here and is going to be here for a long time."

Call of the wild heard, answered by student

By ANNETTE SWEET
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State doctoral student will be traveling to Paraguay this year to study an unusual breed of animal called the bush dog.

Gerald Zuercher, graduate student in biology, received an $8,480 grant from the Conservation Endowment Fund to study and observe the bush dog in its natural habitat in July and December.

"Bush dogs have only been studied in captivity," Zuercher said.

"There isn't much to tell about them, and this study will be the first successful observation. My study will consist of how it relates to its environment and how it lives in a community of predators."

Zuercher and Robert Klemm, director of Conservation and Research at Sunset Zoological Park, submitted the application for the grant. It was approved by the American Association of Zoos and Aquariums. The grant is in Dr. Klemm's name; however, Zuercher will be doing the study.

Zuercher's study of the bush dogs is part of his Ph.D. dissertation.

According to the American Zoo and Aquarium Association, bush dogs are very small canids with a stocky build, a broad face and small ears. They have a short bushy tail and very short legs. Their feet are webbed, and they weigh about 10-15 lb.

Paraguay has a zoo in Itaipu that is working with Zuercher to further the study of the bush dogs.

Bush dogs have been seen in southern Panama, east of the Andes to central Paraguay and southern Brazil. Bush dogs are found primarily in forests and wet Savannah areas. They are considered social, living in groups of up to 10

As of 1995, the captive population is reported to be 135 individuals in 31 collections worldwide. The Itaipu-Paraguay zoo houses the largest captive collection, which in 1996 numbered 45 animals that are housed separately because of frequent breeding.

The Memphis Zoo also is providing a transponder and microchips and vaccines in order to improve the collection's animal management. A collaboration between the Oxford Research Unit and field researchers in Brazil has an ongoing captive study taking place as well.

Sunset Zoo is part of the Conservation Action Partnership that is in conjunction with the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species office.

The office is interested in the endangered species as well as other groups located around the world.

"CITES and the Sunset Zoo work together in gathering information about the bush dogs, which has not had much research done about them," Klemm said.

The Conservation Endowment Fund has given out approximately $230,000 in grant money as of last year.

Zuercher said he hopes the opportunity studying the bush dogs in Paraguay will give him and his team a better understanding of these wild organisms.

BOUNCING BACK

Cats end conference losing streak with 24-point victory over Colorado

By FRANK FLATON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If the K-State men's basketball team was depressed about their Big 12 conference losing streak, they didn't show it against Colorado Wednesday night.

Shooting 52 percent from the field and 63 percent from the three-point arch, the Wildcats bounced back to roll over the Buffaloes 76-52 at Bramlage Coliseum to notch their second Big 12 victory.

The win puts the Cats at 13-6 on the year and a 47-6 edge over Colorado at home in the series. Colorado moves to 10-8, 1-4 in the Big 12.

"It was a good game," head coach Tom Asbury said. "Colorado is a good team that shoots extremely well. I thought everybody played well and with a lot of enthusiasm."

K-State totaled four players in double figures as junior forward Tony Kitt and senior forward Shawn Rhodes combined for 33 points. Kitt poured in 17 and grabbed eight rebounds while Rhodes scored 16. Junior guard Cortez Groves and senior guard Ayome May both scored ten points.

Despite being known for its strong three-point shooting, Colorado shot only 26 percent from the arc and only 31 percent from the field, as K-state forced 18 Buffalo turnovers. The Wildcats overpowered the Buffaloes by out-rebounding them 41-28 to mark the 16th time the Cats out-rebounded an opponent.

Because of the Cats' rebounding and the Buffaloes' poor shooting, Asbury said he was pleased with the Cats' defensive efforts.

"We needed a good defensive effort," Asbury said. "We got out and tested their perimeter shooting. We reminded our guys to get through screens and guard their perimeter people. Our zone was the best it's been all year."

Leading the way for Colorado were sophomore guard/forward Tyron Manlove and senior guard Kenny Price, who scored 12 and 11 points respectively.

With Rhodes scoring the first seven points for K-State, the Wildcats started off strong, putting together a 13-2 run. By forcing Colorado to go scoreless for six minutes in the first half, the Cats stretched the lead to 15 points at the half.

Rhodes said he was excited that the Cats got the ball rolling early.

"It's nice to come back in front of our home crowd," he said. "We've been coming out flat lately. We have to come out every game like that."

In the second half, K-State refused to give in to Colorado's full court press and led by 20 with just over 16 minutes to go. Again, Rhodes started the Cats off strong, hitting a three-pointer and a free throw in the first three minutes.

"We haven't always come out of the shoot like we did in the second half," Asbury said.

Despite Price's and Manlove's efforts and the Cats' turning over the ball 22 times, Colorado couldn't muster a comeback and the Wildcats won their tenth home game of the season.

May said the game wasn't perfect. "We need to take better care of the ball," he said. "We had a lot of traveling calls. I don't know how many traveling calls we've had in the last three games."

As K-state moves on to play Oklahoma on Saturday, Kitt said the team continues to improve with every game.

"We take the same mentality into every game," he said. "We go in thinking we can win, it's just a matter of who shows up to play, and tonight you've seen a good K-State team."

"We place emphasis on the things that need to be done, week to week, team to team, but it all boils down to whether you come to play or not," Kitt said.

Kitt, Rhodes strike, provide punch in win

By JOSHUA KINDER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The one-two punch of post players Tony Kitt and Shawn Rhodes fueled the offense in the Cats' 76-52 win over the Colorado Buffaloes Wednesday night.

Rhodes had a hot hand when he started things off for the Cats, making his first three shots to score the first seven K-State points en-route to 12 of his 16 points at halftime. He was perfect from the three-point stripe in the game, making his first two attempts in the opening half.

"Obviously Shawn Rhodes was terrific getting us off to a start," Wildcat coach Tom Asbury said after the game. "He really did get us started, a good jump-start for the team. We needed that. We really did."

Rhodes said his six-of-seven shooting from the field in the first half is what opened the door for Kitt to score more easily in the paint.

"We had our success last year when Manny and I would work the one-two punch," Rhodes said. "This year we have a lot of guys who can do that."

"I think my hot shooting in the first half really opened it up in the second half for Tony. They were keying on me more then. That gave Tony the chance to score more easily," he said.

During conference action Rhodes has seemed to find his stroke, scoring in double figures in five of the six Big 12 match-ups for K-State. The Big 12 opener was the only conference game in which Rhodes failed to score in double figures when he finished with nine points.

"I knew that if I kept working in practice, staying late and shooting, I knew I would have to be shooting the ball better, especially in conference play," Rhodes said.

After the first-half explosion by Rhodes, Kitt began hitting his shots from under the basket, going five for seven from the field in the game. Kitt finished with the team

Tennis tourney to challenge Wildcats

■ Tuscon event proving ground for young team.

By SETH TROTTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For most K-State students, warm, sunny Arizona in mid-January sounds like a good place to enjoy a relaxing vacation. For the Wildcat tennis team however, the journey to the Grand Canyon state will not be a vacation.

The 1999 spring tennis team faces some tough competition in Tucson, Ariz., this weekend. It will compete against host school Arizona, along with Mississippi and the University of San Diego during the three-day event.

The tournament should help answer several early-season questions for head coach Steve Bietau about his relatively young and inexperienced team.

"There are many unknowns. We have to sort out our doubles pairings," Bietau said.

The lineup for singles play also is not set. No player is older than a sophomore, and no player has had much experience at the No. 1 position.

Bietau said he feels his team has depth in all six single positions.

"From top to bottom, our talent level is pretty good," Bietau said.

The tournament this weekend is the beginning of a tough non-conference schedule. All three opponents the Cats will play are ranked in the Top 35 by the Intercollegiate Tennis Association.

Mississippi has three players ranked in the top 25 of singles, and the team is ranked sixth in the nation. San Diego has No. 1-ranked player Zuzana Lesenarova.

In order for his players to gain experience, Bietau said he makes a tough schedule to allow his players to become well-seasoned veterans.

"I like to make the schedule extremely difficult, because it sets a higher standard," Bietau said.

Bietau said his main goals for the season are that all the players improve throughout the course of the year and that they compete in every match.

Bietau said he was happy with the team's work ethic, who began practicing before the season started.

"I was pleased about the effort the players put in over semester break to work on their games," he said.

Whatever the outcome may be for the tournament, Bietau said the Arizona outing will help the Wildcats improve.

"The Arizona tournament will provide a great opportunity to see improvement from the fall season and should be a valuable learning experience for the future," he said.

On Friday, the Cats open tournament play against the fellow Wildcats of Arizona. On Saturday they face a strong Mississippi team, then they close out the weekend with a match against San Diego on Sunday.

Wildcat offense faces rebuilding in wake of departing senior squad

I could begin this column with another joyous, festive song, as I did last week, but considering that my topic is the K-State offense and special teams for next year's football team — well, I think a more somber song like "Where Does That K-State Offense Go From Here, Umm Bop Baby, Baby" would be just as appropriate.

Mike VIETTI

The Cats lose several crucial components from this year's ninth-best offense in the country, in addition to severe losses to what many experts concluded was the finest special teams unit in the nation.

Losing the best signal caller in K-State history, this guy named Michael Bishop (maybe you've heard of him), will not be the most significant loss for K-State. He won't even be the most important loss on the offensive side of the ball.

Does anyone remember Jonathan

Beasley? If not, here's a refresher: He's the guy who, aside from the defense, single-handedly put away Texas Tech last year with a 33-yard touchdown run. Make no mistake about it, Bishop will be missed, but Beasley will have a greater command of the offense because next year will mark his fourth for the Wildcats.

Beasley has the ability to scramble and while his arm strength might not be at the same level of Bishop (is there anyone else who can throw a ball 90 yards?) he is quite an accurate passer. Junior Adam Helm will return as well, but Beasley should get the starting nod.

Going back to the most devastating loss, K-State returns only two of five starters on the offensive line next season. Sophomore center Randall Cummins will return, as well as freshman left/right tackle Thomas Barnett, leaving a tremendous question mark for next year. Junior Ian Moses backed up the left guard spot last season and should be the front-runner to start next year.

Sophomore Milford Stephenson started seven games at left tackle last year before giving way to All-American Ryan Young. Stephenson's size, 6 feet

2 inches and 275 pounds, would make him better suited to play as a guard, instead of tackle. If that occurs, freshman Dennis Jones and sophomore Ryan Cummings would be the leading candidates to play tackle opposite Barnett.

Juking back into the offensive backfield (aren't bad puns fun?), offensive coordinator Ron Hudson has some huge gaps to fill next year. The best running back in K-State history is, well, history, along with the best fullback in the Wildcat annals. In my mind, David Allen proved on the field last year that he can be a standout running back for the Cats and should be given the starting nod.

Look for freshman Eric Gooden to return to his natural position and back up Allen. Don't fret about the loss of fullback Brian Goolsby just yet; K-State will have sophomore transfer Johnno Lazetich next year. Who? Don't make me spell his name again. Seriously though, I've heard stories about the poundings players take in practice from this 6-foot 1-inch, 240-pound fullback, and he should have the opportunity to do so against the opposition for K-State next year.

Moving on to another position with a question mark, albeit a smaller one, the Wildcats must find a receiver to start opposite freshman Aaron Lockett, who, I must admit, surprised me greatly last year with his ability to burn defenders and make the tough catches.

The question is, who will play alongside him next year? K-State is not lacking receivers from the standpoint that there are several candidates, but there is a lack of experience amongst them. Just as a reminder, I didn't forget junior Frank Murphy; I just think his talents would be better served as a receiver.

Think about it: Lockett, Murphy and Allen all on the field at the same time — that's why I never want to be a defensive coordinator. Sophomore Martez Wesley played in 11 games last year but caught no passes. Freshman Brandon Clark caught the controversial pass to close the Baylor game, but that was his only grab.

Junior transfer Quincy Morgan played community college ball with Bishop and is almost as big as Darnell McDonald at 6 feet 2 inches and 207 pounds and should factor into the mix. K-State also loses tight end Justin Swift, who will be replaced by sophomore Shad Meier, who saw time last year in two tight end formations.

Moving on to special teams, the Cats have yet more empty spaces. Junior Jaime Rheem should do fine replacing Martin Gramatica.

However, there are questions concerning who will replace punter James Garcia and long snapper Brandon Knowles. Garcia excelled last year when he was allowed to punt by the K-State offense, and Knowles was one of the finest long snappers in the country — he never had a wild snap in his four-year career.

Allen will return punts for TDs again next year, and Murphy should take the lead in kickoffs.

Though not as radiant as the returning defense next year, the K-State offense has the potential to be as deadly next year, but only if a team with several younger players can perform beyond its years.

New name won't change thrift store's style

By JUSTIN VANNIST
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

A Manhattan icon since 1984 recently changed owners and names.

Grand Ol' Trunk, formerly Grandma's Trunk, is a thrift store, specializing in vintage clothing and other knickknacks from the 1960s and '70s.

The store now is in the hands of Terrie Haller and her friend, Melody Smith, who purchased the store from her brother, Roger Andres, and her mother, Sherry Andres. Smith said she purchased the business after her brother decided to farm instead.

Haller and Smith have a long history together: The women have been friends for more than 35 years.

"We were there for each other's kids' births, been each other's bridesmaids and worked together when we were younger," Haller said.

Soon after the purchase, the two decided to give the name of the store an overhaul.

"We decided to change the name, sort of give it a new touch," Haller said. "It is the same place with new owners. We just decided it was time for Grandma to retire."

Smith said the name of the store has been in her family for several years.

"The original name came from my mother," Smith said. "She remembered as a kid that she had the most fun going through her grandmother's trunks."

The store, like its owners, has interesting stories to tell in the variety of the items it carries. It isn't uncommon for the store to receive items with no known purpose.

"The stuff changes from day to day," Haller said. "We put out anywhere from 500 to 700 pieces of clothing a day and around 25 big boxes of other stuff every day."

"It is fun to put stuff out that we have no idea what it is and see how long it takes to find out what it is. Someone eventually figures out what it is."

"We have definitely found that one man's junk is another man's treasure," she said.

In addition to the clothes and household items it carries, the store also has a bookstore behind it. A house with wall-to-wall bookshelves filled not only with books, but other items as well, is behind the store. All rooms in the house, including the closets, have items for sale.

"Not many people know about the bookstore," Haller said. "We have just about everything out there. Books, records, CDs, pictures, jewelry, even 8-tracks."

Sometimes the variety makes it difficult to keep everything in order. If an employee of the store leaves a coat or a personal possession behind, it usually ends up being sold.

"It is not unusual to get ready to leave for the day and go to look for your coat and someone will say, 'Oh, I sold that.' My brother has lost clothes he left in the dryer many times," Smith said. "If it isn't sold, we have at least priced it."

The job is not without its perks, however. College students are regularly a source of levity.

"The boys are running around here in women's clothing, asking their friends if they look good or if certain beads match," Smith said.

Only one problem has arisen from men trying to dress up as women, she said. Many times women come in with their boyfriends, trying to find articles of clothing for them. Haller said many times, the women often fail to find the right sizes for their men.

"It is really funny when a girlfriend is trying to squeeze her 300-pound football-player boyfriend into a size-five dress," Haller said.

Smith said it all adds up to an unusual store with even more unusual employees.

"It just proves that you have to be crazy to work here," Smith said.

Grand Ol' Trunk is open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

Poetry reading to take place at Java Espresso & Bakery

Musicians such as Jewel turn poetry into music.

The Union Program Council Arts Committee, on the other hand, gives local poets the chance to turn their favorite music lyrics into poetry.

The committee is sponsoring a "Music Lyrics as Poetry" poetry reading at 8 tonight at Java Espresso & Bakery.

Paul Donovan, UPC program adviser, said this is the second time UPC has used music lyrics as a theme for a poetry reading.

"We did it once a year ago, and it went over pretty well," Donovan said. Donovan said the readings will be done in an open-mike style. When one performer is finished, the next person can stand up and read something.

Although the suggested theme is music lyrics, the readings aren't limited to lyrics.

"There are a couple of people who write original poetry that is very unusual and interesting," Donovan said. "You never know quite what you will get."

Donovan said audience members have the option simply to sit and watch, but they can read something if they wish.

"I encourage people not to be shy," Donovan said. "It's very informal and friendly. People can have a lot of fun with it."

Native storyteller to share gift with K-State students

By JUSTIN VANNIST
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

James McKinley, writer of fiction and non-fiction who teaches at the University of Missouri-Kansas City, is the first author scheduled to read his work as part of the Visiting Writers Series this spring at K-State.

McKinley will be reading his work at 7:30 tonight in the auditorium of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

McKinley is a professor of English language and literature at the University of Missouri-Kansas City and is on the editorial staff of the national literary magazine "New Letters." He has written both fiction and non-fiction works, including "Acts of Love" and "The Fickleman Suite and Other Stories." McKinley has written for several national publications as well.

His work is mostly short stories, but he is working on a novel and has written magazine articles and books.

Elizabeth Dodd, director of the creative writing program, said she often enjoys reading about McKinley's unique and developed characters.

"In some ways, he is a classic storyteller," Dodd said. "He has full and rich development of the character within the situation of the story."

"A number of fiction writers these days are interested in issues of voice and development of the narrator than in the development of the other characters," Dodd said. "The narrator is the star."

Dodd said she thought that in this way McKinley's work differed from that of his counterparts.

"In some of Jim's work, that is not the case. There is more attention to the full community of personages in the story," she said.

McKinley's visit also will include a meeting concerning an upcoming conference in Kansas City, Mo., with members of the creative writing department.

"UMKC is hosting a large conference in spring of 2000," Dodd said. "It is the Associated Writing Program conference that occurs every spring. They bring in faculty writers from all over the country for a scholarly conference."

K-State is helping to sponsor the conference with UMKC, and Dodd is scheduled to ask K-State faculty members for assistance.

CLINTON

than 100 percent of your minimum daily requirement for lawyering."

Lawmakers' turn for questioning the two legal teams will come at the conclusion of the defense presentation, through queries to be submitted through Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, who is presiding over the trial.

Outside the Senate chamber, Clinton flew to New York and Pennsylvania to tout proposals he made in Tuesday night's State of the Union address, and there were indications that the political atmosphere was in flux in the second presidential impeachment trial in the nation's history.

One prominent conservative Republican, Pat Robertson, conceded the president had "hit a home run" with his nationally televised speech. "From a public relations standpoint, he's won. ... They might as well dismiss this impeachment hearing and get on with something else, because it's over as far as I'm concerned," Robertson said on "The 700 Club" TV show.

Clinton's job-approval ratings, already at robust levels, moved even higher after the speech, ranging from 66 percent in an ABC poll to 72 percent in a CBS survey to 76 percent for NBC.

Republican prosecutors became more aggressive about contesting points being made by the president's lawyers. They issued a stream of written rebuttals during the day and took advantage of breaks in the trial to go before microphones outside the room and make their points in person.

Hovering over the proceedings was an unresolved issue of whether to call witnesses, as the House prosecutors and many Republican senators want.

Republican officials said it was possible they would invite Clinton to testify, although no decision has been made.

Votes are expected early next week on competing motions, one expected to be offered by a Democrat to adjourn the trial, and the other by a Republican to call witnesses for depositions.

Democratic officials said the president's defenders are eager to demonstrate they have well over 34 Senate votes to adjourn the trial. Such a showing, they said, would make it clear that however long the trial runs there is no chance that a two-thirds majority will vote for the president's removal.

The officials said as many as three or four Democrats might join with Republicans in opposition to the proposal. Even so, that would leave 40 or more of the Senate's 45 Democrats in Clinton's corner on the first test vote of the proceedings.

Democratic officials also said it is unlikely the party would consent to a bipartisan agreement with Republicans on the witness issue, raising the possibility of a highly partisan vote.

Some Democratic senators said they believed there was a chance Republicans might relent on their call for witnesses, but there was no sign of that from the GOP side of the aisle.

Inside the Senate chamber, first Craig, and then Mills sought to dismember the charges brought by the House prosecutors.

Craig showed the Senate several videotaped segments of seasoned lawyers who had testified before the House Judiciary Committee saying that perjury charges would never be brought against Clinton if he were an average defendant.

He also used the words of Republican Reps. Henry Hyde of Illinois and Charles Canady of Florida, both of whom confessed to some misgivings about the claim that Clinton had lied about the date his relationship with Lewinsky began. "I think there is doubt about the president willfully lied" on that point, he quoted Canady as saying.

The article alleging perjury "does not allege a single perjurious statement" specifically, Craig said, thus falling "well below the most basic minimal standard" for prosecutors.

"Do not let this case and these charges, as flawed and unfair as they are, destroy a fundamental underpinning of American democracy: the right of the people and no one else to select the president of the United States," he said.

Mills went last during the day, and she offered a similar argument against the allegations of obstruction of justice.

Over and over, she said, the House prosecutors had used only the version of events that best suited their case and had ignored competing interpretations.

Clinton's conduct, she said, "while clearly not attractive or admirable, is not criminal."

For example, she said that it wasn't Clinton who instigated the effort to conceal gifts he had given to Lewinsky — a key point in the House claims of obstruction of justice. Rather, she argued, it was Lewinsky herself who wanted to turn them over to Betty Currie, the president's secretary and a friend of hers.

She did so "because she suspected that lawyers for Jones would break into her apartment looking for gifts," Mills said. "She was also concerned that the Jones people might tap her phone. Therefore, she wanted to put the gifts out of reach of the Jones lawyers, out of harm's way."

because of a DUI Richardson received.

Tuesday, Crosby said Lawless was not Richardson's parole officer.

"It was just a misunderstanding," Crosby said. "Many people assumed the nature of their relationship because Lawless was a parole officer and Richardson had been in trouble with the law a few times. We know that was not the case, but we aren't sure how they really met."

Elaine Richardson also said her son was stalked by Lawless. She said Lawless had an obsession with Richardson that grew until September or October. She said Richardson received threatening phone calls and that his car was vandalized in the weeks before his death.

RCPD investigators have linked Lawless to the vandalism of Richardson's car but have not been able to find evidence that Richardson was stalked by Lawless, Crosby said.

Although Elaine Richardson said her son was aware of Lawless' obsession at the time of the vandalism, police records state Richardson did not list Lawless as a possible suspect. Another name was given to the police instead, Crosby said.

"It appears that Lawless was responsible for the vandalism, but at the time, Richardson did not list Lawless as a suspect. He gave us another name, and we released that suspect after questioning," Crosby said. "The possibility that Lawless was stalking him is there, but it is just speculation."

Because there is a lack of evidence to substantiate speculations, the police cannot determine all of the details in the case, including whether there was a sexual relationship between Lawless and Richardson, Crosby said.

Crosby said he will close the case when he receives the ballistics report and a few other confirmations. He said he anticipates to release the conclusions of the investigation and final details within a few weeks.

VETO

discussion, the limits were a big-enough issue to include in the final draft, he said.

Mann said adding the limits after the bill was introduced didn't give senators enough time to review the changes. With the veto, he hopes they take more time to consider the ramifications of the contribution cap.

Arts and Sciences Sen. Amie Kershner said she didn't like the bill when it was passed, but she doesn't agree with Mann, either. She hopes changes are made that limit campaign spending even further.

"I am a strong supporter of reform, but not this kind of reform," Kershner said. "I think you can run a good campaign for less than $2,000, a lot less than that."

Muetting said he thought improvement was needed, and that the new legislation should be given a chance to see how it would work.

"We need to move forward and try to fix the problems concerning election spending for the future. If we implement this now, we can see what happens with this year's elections and make changes next fall," Muetting said.

Mann said he thought changes should be made, but these changes weren't the right ones.

"Overall, this isn't horrible legislation," Mann said, "but it isn't outstanding. When has average been good enough for K-state? We want to do the right thing, and signing this bill would not be the right thing."

Mann said Wednesday's veto was the first in two years.

KIT

high in scoring with 17 points, 12 coming in the second half.

In just 18 minutes of play, Kitt pulled down eight rebounds, two boards shy of a double-double.

Kitt's scoring production against the Buffs was his highest since the Cats' 82-63 win over Texas Tech Jan. 9, when he poured in 10 points.

"We were due," Kitt said. "I think Shawn really set the tone for the game in the first half. When the second half came around, things really opened up for us. We were able to mix things up more inside and out for the rest of the game."

Kitt said he can always tell when Rhodes is on the verge of a big outing.

"Not to say that Shawn never comes to play, but you could really see it in his eyes. It was the same look I saw in his eyes during the Indiana game," Kitt said.

House members abandon candy jars, pizza boxes in restored chamber

By JOHN HANNA
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The House has banned communal snack jars and abandoned pizza boxes from its chamber, but not without some grumbling from members.

Included in a new set of House rules for the 1999 and 2000 legislative sessions is a clause that says members cannot leave food unattended at their desks.

The change is designed to improve members' behavior now that the chamber has been remodeled.

Members still will be allowed to eat at their desks, they just won't be allowed to have food on their desks unless they are sitting or standing nearby.

"I've turned over a new leaf," said Rep. Ted Powers, R-Mulvane, well known for keeping a wide range of snacks on his desk to share with colleagues and staff members who walk by. "The commissary has been driven underground," he said.

House members have taken to eating at their desks during long sessions, and in past years, the chamber would be littered with pizza and sandwich boxes and kernels of popcorn dotting the carpet.

It was a tradition that appeared to have the tacit approval of House leaders, many of whom kept open jars of candy at their own desks.

It also was a tradition that distinguished the rowdier House from the more sedate Senate. Senators don't need a rule to keep from dining at their desks; tradition dictates, and they follow.

What spurred change in the lower house was a $432,000 renovation project that restored the House to its more ornate appearance of the 1880s.

"The Rules Committee felt strongly that we needed to make a better impression," said Rep. Thomas Klein, D-Wichita, a committee member.

The change has not come without complaints.

Rep. Kay O'Connor, R-Olathe, called it silly and, like other representatives, she suggested some members would be faced with the choice of either not speaking or bringing their food to the microphone with them.

She noted that many of her colleagues drink coffee at their desks.

"I would challenge anyone to put a cup of coffee in a drawer and shut it without spilling it," she said.

Others are less serious about the change. Rep. Phill Kline, R-Shawnee, said he expects to be busted for breaking the rule regularly.

"I leave a lot of half-empty coffee mugs on my desk," he said.

Kansas teen pregnancy rate improves

By LEW FERGUSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Fewer Kansas teen-agers are having babies and more teen-age mothers are receiving prenatal care than in the past, but Kansas still ranks in the middle of the pack nationally in a new teen pregnancy report.

The report also said fewer Kansas teen-agers are having abortions, but the state still ranks among those states with the highest teen-age abortion rates.

The Kids Count report, released Wednesday by the Annie E. Casey Foundation, showed Kansas had a teen birth rate in 1980 somewhat higher than the national average. By 1996 — the latest year for which data was available — it was down 11 percent and slightly below the national average.

The report also showed that more teen-age mothers in Kansas receive prenatal care than the national average. "I think we're making slow but steady progress," said Gary Brunk, executive director of Kansas Action for Children, a statewide organization that promotes children's issues.

"I would say this is reason to be cautiously optimistic about the trend in Kansas," he said. "But it's also clear there is much more that we need to do."

Brunk said funding for pregnancy prevention programs in Kansas is "pretty scattershot."

"We really don't have the resources to do the community effort that it's been proved makes a difference in other states," he said.

In 1980, there were 57 births to young Kansas women, ages 15 to 19, for every 1,000 births in Kansas.

By 1996, that number was down to 50. Nationally, the numbers were 53 per 1,000 births in 1980 and 54 per 1,000 births in 1996.

Kansas ranked 26th among the 50 states in 1996 in births to teen-age mothers.

The state recorded 4,714 births to women ages 15 to 19 in 1996, and it is projected to have 5,032 such births in 2005.

The state fared better in the number of unmarried teen mothers who receive prenatal care.

Only 7 percent receive prenatal care late in pregnancy or not at all in Kansas, ranking Kansas sixth in the nation. The national average was 10 percent.

In Kansas, the number of abortions performed on females in the 15-19 age range was 31 per 1,000 in 1992, and 28 per 1,000 in 1995.

Of 42 states for which figures were available, only Rhode Island, North Carolina and Hawaii had higher teen abortion rates than Kansas, which was tied for fourth with Oregon.

Brunk said that probably is attributable to fewer girls getting pregnant.

"If you have less pregnancies, you have less abortions," he said.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mercy will remodel, not build new hospital

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State officials remain upbeat about options remaining with Mercy Health Center Inc. despite one door closing Tuesday.

Jim McFadden, interim CEO for Mercy, said the board of directors decided that building an entirely new hospital building was an extremely unlikely course of action.

McFadden said Mercy did not want to contend with the costs of building a whole new facility with the construction of the competing Manhattan Surgical Center already underway. The surgical center, expected to be completed in the Miller Ranch development west of town by late 1999, is owned by local surgeons and is unaffiliated with Mercy, despite negotiations between the two late last year.

The decision eliminates one possibility for K-State to sell a 22-acre plot of land that includes the Kansas Artificial Breeding Service Unit's "bull barns" and the Kansas Forest Service to Mercy. The idea had been discussed informally between Mercy and K-State for roughly 18 months.

However, work with the Mercy on College Avenue building could take its place as a result.

"There's definitely going to be some plans for updating and renovation," McFadden said.

Tom Rawson, K-State vice president of administration and finance, said the decision was something of a relief.

"It's good news that they've made the decision, and now we move from here," Rawson said.

The university had been waiting on Mercy's decision and still wants to work with the hospital, Rawson said. If all goes well, Mercy will have completed its study of renovation options and be ready by June to consider a K-State proposal of letting Lafene Health Center share portions of the Mercy on Sunset Avenue building after the College Avenue renovation.

"I'm not saying we'd move in by June, but we'd know if there was space or not," Rawson said.

McFadden echoed Rawson's statement, and said Mercy wants to work with K-State as soon as it decides on its own options.

"We've simply left the door open for KSU," he said.

Lafene Director Lannie Zweimiller said his staff will continue to study the Sunset building's floor plans to determine how Lafene best could move in if the opportunity arrives within the next two to three years.

"As far as I'm concerned, I think we need to stay on top of it and be ready to take action if the word is given," Zweimiller said. "I think there's a crack in the door it might occur down the road."

Zweimiller had stated last fall that even if Lafene could move, its budget would not be able to totally fund it. Results from a student survey planned for this February by the Student Health Advisory Committee hopefully will give an idea of how much students are willing to help pay, he said.

And the waiting line gets even longer. K-State administration has had hopes to move the Department of English from Denison Hall and demolish the building since 1997.

With the possibility of moving Lafene off campus, Vice President of Institutional Advancement Bob Krause said the emptied Lafene building could provide a new home for the department and a faculty numbering more than 100.

"We would still like to do that if the space were available," Krause said.

Built after World War II when the student population was about 5,000, Denison is a prime candidate for demolishing not only for its position blocking the view of Hale library but also for its declining condition, Krause said.

"We had some concerns that if we wanted to use that building in the long term, it would require some major, major renovations," he said.

The Lafene building might not be the only place to relocate the English department, though, and other sites on campus are being looked at, Krause said.

Jurors convict Bradford for couple's death

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A Missouri man was convicted Thursday of murdering a rural Kansas couple, a day after he took the stand and pleaded with their families for forgiveness.

Virgil Bradford, the only witness for the defense, could face the death penalty when the penalty phase of his trial starts Monday.

Jurors in Riley County District Court found Bradford of Kansas City, Mo., 28, guilty of capital murder, aggravated robbery, aggravated burglary and two counts of felony theft.

A co-defendant, Robert Verge, 24, also of Kansas City, Mo., was convicted of capital murder last year in Abilene and was sentenced to 60 years in prison without parole.

During Verge's trial and again in Bradford's, allegations of racial bias were raised by the defense, who felt that because of the primarily white makeup of Dickinson County and because of the low percentage of blacks that were chosen for Bradford's jury pool, the two would be unable to receive a fair trial.

In a shaky voice Wednesday, Bradford asked for forgiveness for the slayings of Kyle and Chrystine Moore at their Solomon home Feb. 17, 1997. The couple, who were in their early 30s, were found stabbed and shot to death.

Veto could slow election process

By CAIT PURINTON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Body President Tracey Mann's Wednesday veto of a campaign spending bill could cause headaches for the Student Governing Association Election Committee.

With SGA elections less than a month and a half away, Election Committee Chair Joe Ashley said early Thursday the committee is still a few people short and its members haven't been approved yet. Now the committee will also have to deal with the effects of the veto.

"I advised him not to veto it," Ashley said. "I thought he was under the understanding that I liked the changes and my committee was willing to work with the changes."

"He just couldn't get that whole T-shirt thing out of his head," he said.

The vetoed bill limited the amount of money a presidential candidate could spend to $2,000, but that figure included articles of clothing.

Previous years' rules limited spending to $815, without clothing. Presidential candidates have often spent thousands of dollars on T-shirts and sold them to supporters without having to report the cost.

Under the vetoed bill, candidates would also have had to file an expense report listing contributors and their level of support.

Mann said doubling campaign expenditures would create conflicts with SGA's effort to become more inclusive.

If the bill had passed, he said lower-income candidates would have had to raise more money to compete with higher-income candidates.

He said the emphasis on regulating contributions was harder to enforce and allows for more loopholes.

Mann suggested a framework for revising the bill when he formally introduced his veto at Thursday night's Senate meeting.

■ Leave the spending limit at $815 and allow candidates to record only the screening and application fees for campaign clothing.

■ This duplicates last spring's rule, when clothing wasn't included.

■ Limit supporters to buying two articles of clothing.

■ Receipts for each article of clothing would be filled out, including the buyer's name and the purchase amount. All receipts would be turned in with the candidate's expenditure report. The elections committee

Dick Gregory, keynote speaker for K-State's Martin Luther King Jr. observance, speaks in McCain Auditorium Thursday. Gregory is a commentator, comedian and civil-rights activist.

Shot of REALITY

Speaker entertains some, shocks others with keynote address

STORY BY DANICA COTO

Laughter was already ricocheting Thursday around McCain Auditorium, and the speaker had uttered only one sentence.

"I'm going to talk real quick because I think my Viagra shot is going to kick in," said Dick Gregory, keynote speaker for K-State's Martin Luther King Jr. observance.

But the audience got its own shot of reality.

For more than an hour, Gregory, a comedian and civil-rights activist, spoke on issues that prompted cries of approval and disgust.

Before starting the speech, Gregory said someone reminded him there were young children in the audience.

"The football team refers to themselves as the 'Lynch Mob,' and they have the nerve to send me a message to not use vulgar language?" he asked.

Such outspokenness made some people in the audience uncomfortable, but Gregory said his outspokenness also helped him establish civil rights for black people and for society in general.

"It's amazing what we Americans will tolerate," Gregory said. "This has been the most vicious, sexist, racist society that has ever existed on this planet. We do stuff in this country that would make Hitler blush."

Gregory worked with Martin Luther King Jr., and both went to jail and protested without violence. Gregory gave up his career as a comedian and dedicated himself to advancing the civil-rights movement, often fasting to prove his point.

"I couldn't think of any other way to catch people's attention, especially in a country where people die from being overweight, not underweight," he said.

Gregory spoke of the injustices names carry today. He mentioned the Washington Redskins football team and the Indian-head nickel, both of which refer to a time when American Indians were killed and their heads were brought to white leaders.

Other references were aimed at Christians.

"Mardi Gras is the biggest Christian holiday. New Orleans is known as 'Sin City,' and Christians don't go there to change it," Gregory said.

An issue Gregory highlighted was adults using youth as a scapegoat.

"Adults ask what's wrong with the youth," Gregory said. "It's you, I tell them."

Clinton lawyers complete opening defense arguments

By LARRY MARGASAK
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — In a plea to former colleagues, retired Sen. Dale Bumpers told senators today they must resist a House effort to remove President Clinton in a drive that is dangerous to the unique mix of pure democracy and republican government.

In a speech that mixed self-deprecating humor, emotional descriptions of his friendship with Clinton and repeated references to his own reverence for the Constitution, Bumpers closed out the White House opening defense argument with a personal appeal after the president's lawyers relentlessly attacked the evidence.

"You have taken a solemn oath to be fair and impartial," said Bumpers, who retired from the Senate in December after serving for 24 years. "I know you all, I know you as friends and I know you as honorable men and I am perfectly satisfied to put that in your hands, under your oath."

Bumpers denounced Clinton's behavior in the Monica Lewinsky controversy as a breach of his marriage vows and a terrible moral lapse — but not a crime that was impeachable. He spoke eloquently of the human toll the president's mistake had on Clinton's family, while chiding House prosecutors for a lack of compassion.

He warned the senators that the idea of removing Clinton for such offenses is dangerous to the political process and is dangerous to the unique mix of pure democracy and republican government.

"Oh colleagues, you have such an awesome responsibility," Bumpers said.

Though mostly serious, he also brought laughter to the floor. He recalled how he and Clinton had once survived a rough plane landing in Arkansas one snowy day. "We jumped out and ran away unscathed — to the dismay of every budding politician in Arkansas," he said.

But he reminded his recent colleagues that he was not there as Clinton's friend but as a former senator concerned about the precedent a conviction of Clinton would set.

He argued that the Founding Fathers had put impeachment in the Constitution "to protect the public, not punish the president."

Earlier, Clinton's private lawyer charged that House impeachment prosecutors had ignored evidence that would exonerate the president in what he called an attempt to fit some of the facts into a sinister pattern of obstruction of justice. "The direct evidence disproves the

Russian official: Amending ABM treaty threat to Russia

MOSCOW — U.S. plans to develop a national system for defense against attack by long-range missiles threaten Russia's security, a top defense ministry official said Thursday.

The United States, fearing a possible attack by a hostile nation like North Korea or Iraq, wants to amend the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty so it can start building a missile-defense system.

U.S. Defense Secretary William Cohen said Wednesday that if Russia rejects proposed U.S. amendments to the Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty, then Washington, D.C., will withdraw from the pact and proceed with development anyway.

Russia's defense ministry dismissed Cohen's explanation of U.S. fears of attack by a rogue state.

"Any military expert understands that these states have not, and, in the near future, will not have guaranteed means of delivering weapons to U.S. territory," said Col. Gen. Leonid Ivashov, chief of international cooperation at the ministry.

Any changes to the ABM treaty would be regarded "as a threat to Russian security interests," Ivashov was quoted as saying by the Interfax news agency.

Russian President Boris Yeltsin still was considering the American amendments to the ABM treaty.

A U.S. missile defense would not be deployed until 2005, assuming that President Clinton determines that such a system is technically feasible, Cohen said.

Russia (and before it, the Soviet Union), long has opposed a U.S. national missile defense.

The Cold War-era ABM treaty was meant to leave both superpowers vulnerable to attack and thus limit the chance that either would attempt a decisive first strike.

Ivashov said "attempts to bypass the ABM treaty would upset strategic stability" in the world and might jeopardize long-delayed ratification of the START II arms reduction treaty by the Russian parliament.

Kansas House recites pledge for first time in statehood

TOPEKA — After 138 years of statehood, the Kansas House did something Thursday it had never done before.

Its 125 members recited the Pledge of Allegiance to the American flag in opening its daily session.

They made it a tribute to military veterans.

"It is a real honor to lead you today in the Pledge of Allegiance," said Rep. David Huff, R-Lenexa, chosen as the first member to lead the first pledge recitation.

"We should also honor those who served our country," said Huff, who then invited all military veterans in the House to join him at the front of the House chamber. About two dozen did, amid prolonged applause from other members.

Giving the pledge each day is among new rules adopted by the House on Wednesday.

"The Rules Committee felt strongly that we needed to make a better impression," said Rep. Thomas Klein, D-Wichita, a committee member.

Regional free trade coalition discussed for African states

ARUSHA, Tanzania — The leaders of Tanzania, Kenya and Uganda gathered Thursday at the foothills of Mt. Kilimanjaro to discuss resurrecting a free trade bloc in eastern Africa.

Tanzanian President Benjamin Mkapa, Ugandan President Yoweri Museveni and Kenyan President Daniel arap Moi shared an informal working dinner before the formal opening of the East African Cooperation summit on Friday.

The former British colonies hope to recreate the coalition that formed the East African Community in the early 1960s.

In its heyday, the East African Community had a common airline, rail and postal system and a common currency, the East African shilling.

It collapsed in 1977, partly because of a divergence of economic policies. Uganda was in the throes of civil war, Kenya was pursuing state-dominated capitalism and Tanzania was experimenting with socialism.

Now, all three subscribe to free-market economic systems, offering hope that regional economic integration might this time succeed.

It was unclear whether an application by Rwanda to join the group would be addressed during today's summit.

A Rwandan delegation, including Finance Minister Donald Kaberuka, arrived in Arusha on Thursday, apparently to press the issue.

Witnesses speak of rebel atrocities in Sierra Leone

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone — Residents of a rebel-held neighborhood in Sierra Leone's capital accused insurgents Thursday of carrying out mass killings, torture and rape.

Although most areas of Freetown were quiet Thursday after two weeks of vicious, door-to-door combat, rebels fighting to unseat Sierra Leone's government still were sowing terror in the eastern Kissy neighborhood.

Government officials said pro-government militias and the Nigerian-led intervention known as ECOMOG were slowly advancing on pockets of rebel resistance in Kissy.

Rachel Fallah, who fled her home with her 80-year-old mother Wednesday night, said rebels had raped young girls and forced teen-age boys to carry goods pillaged from homes.

"The rebels raped most of the young girls, said Fallah, a Sierra Leonean employee for the U.N. Development Program.

"They take them from houses at night and return them in the morning," he said.

In the face of attempts by a West African coalition army to root them out, the insurgents also were using women and children as human shields, she said.

Elsewhere in Freetown, hunger and thirst cast a long shadow. Aid agencies have warned of impending starvation unless emergency food supplies are delivered to Freetown.

Patients in the city's main hospital have been abandoned, and countless homes have been destroyed by shelling and raging fires.

No one has tallied all the casualties, but the number of dead run into the hundreds and possibly thousands.

Health Minister Tijan Jalloh said Thursday that government workers had buried 420 corpses in mass graves and were searching the streets for more.

Many bodies were buried by homeowners in shallow graves and would be disinterred and reburied, Jalloh said.

The insurgents also had hacked off the hands of at least 30 Freetown residents, Jalloh said.

The rebels have been accused of committing thousands of similar mutilations in rural villages last year during a campaign aimed at spreading their influence through terror.

A number of child soldiers had been taken prisoner and turned over to authorities for rehabilitation, ECOMOG commander Brig. Gen. Abu Ahmadu said.

State radio called on all government workers to return to their jobs by Monday.

Racial prejudice motivation behind frequent hate crimes

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Racial prejudice motivated more than half the 8,049 hate crimes in 1997 that were reported to the FBI, the bureau reported Thursday.

As in 1996, racial prejudice was the most common motivation for hate crimes, accounting in 1997 for 4,710 incidents.

In order of magnitude, other reported motivations were 1,385 incidents attributed to prejudice about religion, 1,102 to sexual orientation, 836 to ethnic or national origin, 12 to disability and four to multiple prejudices, the FBI said.

The 1997 data come from 11,211 law enforcement agencies in 48 states and the District of Columbia, representing 83 percent of the population.

There were several hundred more incidents in 1996 than 1997, but there were more than 100 more police agencies reporting in the earlier year. Eight people were murdered in 1997 in hate crimes, with five attributed to race bias and three to bias against sexual orientation.

Three fees face SGA committee

Library, Rec, KSDB ask for increases

By MIKE WATSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three new fee proposals stand out on the agenda of the Student Senate privilege fee committee this semester.

The funding of KSDB-FM 91.9, Hale Library and the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex are issues coming before the Student Senate privilege fee committee on Sunday. They hope to obtain more money for operations, repairs and material costs.

After a funding problem with KSDB last year, the privilege fee committee hired an auditor to keep track of funds to prevent future funding problems. It approved $18,000, or about half the annual salary of an auditor, to the Internal Audit Office to create the new audit position.

"In reality, the office is supposed to spend about 1,000 hours per year auditing the recipients of privilege fee funding," Jeff Meder, privilege fee committee chair, said.

"The auditing schedule is set each March for the following fiscal year, but can be modified for an ad hoc need, like the KSDB situation, where we request an audit immediately."

Members of the radio station staff are going before Student Senate on Feb. 4 for a new privilege fee. Station Director Jeremy Claeys said. The fee will cover an increase in student salary if passed. Their salaries are 47 percent behind that of K-State's peer institutions now.

KSDB's first committee meeting is scheduled for Sunday. More information will be available at that time, Claeys said.

Hale is seeking a $2 per credit hour fee. This is a raise from the $.85 fee that went before the board last year and failed. The money is to attain up-to-date periodicals, Meder said.

The committee can send it to Student Senate for approval, or a student referendum can be requested. A new fee must receive a two-thirds Senate vote, but some senators already have said they might add the library issue to this spring's Student Government Association elections ballot, letting students decide whether to levy a fee.

The Rec Complex is going before the board to receive an operations and repair fee, Meder said. The operations fee will pay for student wages and office expenses. The repair fee will pay for a certain amount of new equipment.

Along with the Rec Center, a feasibility study is being conducted to build a new aquatic center. The privilege fee committee has approved $10,000 to have an architectural consultant conduct the study, Meder said. As the issue gets closer to review, the results from the study and its expected fee will be available.

Students don't want to pay any more than necessary, he said. However, Meder also said he feels money going towards better student life is money well spent.

"Obviously I don't want to pay additional money in tuition fees unless there is some direct benefit I will receive," Meder said. "If a definite need exists and filling that need will somehow improve K-State student life, I'm OK with that. I am concerned with the rising costs of a college education, and that would certainly relate to student privilege fees."

If new privilege fees are approved, summer semester fees will not be affected. Summer fees are assessed on a prorated basis based on 1998-1999 school year figures. Fees passed this year will be effective for fall 1999 and spring and summer 2000, Meder said.

"OBVIOUSLY I DON'T WANT TO PAY ADDITIONAL MONEY IN TUITION FEES UNLESS THERE IS SOME DIRECT BENEFIT I WILL RECEIVE. IF A DEFINITE NEED EXISTS AND FILLING THAT NEED WILL SOMEHOW IMPROVE STUDENT LIFE, I'M OK WITH THAT."

Athletic Department plea to Nike: 'Just do it'

■ Volleyball, basketball are on department wish list for Nike sponsorship.

By DANICA COTO
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Athletic directors are crossing their fingers as February approaches. This is the month when their Nike deals are renewed, though some are hoping for changes within those deals.

Football is the only sport at K-State receiving $100,000 worth of Nike apparel and equipment, and it has since 1996.

Bob Cavello, K-State assistant athletic director, said he wants Nike to extend its sponsorship to basketball and women's volleyball.

K-State has a Level 1 sponsorship with Nike, which is for only one sport. The athletic directors are aiming for a Level 2 sponsorship, which is a multi-level deal.

"I don't know how realistic that is, but it is an objective," said Jim Epps, K-State senior associate athletics director. "I want to get sponsorships for everyone who wants them."

Epps said men's basketball coach Tom Asbury was willing to consider a Nike offer. Asbury's team is sponsored by Reebok, which provides uniforms and travel bags. The volleyball team is the only other team receiving corporate sponsorship, which is provided by the K-State Union Bookstore and Mikasa, a company that makes volleyballs.

All sports teams, however, receive a fixed amount of money from the general-revenue pool, which amounts to more than $17 million, which is 94 percent self-generated through ticket sales and fund raising, among other ways, and 6 percent is allocated primarily by student fees and state salaries.

These revenues could be enhanced by the renewal of the Nike deal, which will take place in Beaverton, Ore., in mid-February.

Cavello said the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and student athletes have been happy with Nike's products.

"The only challenge is to get more products and more teams involved," Cavello said. "It's very hard. It's a business. You have to show how this is going to be a money-making venture."

The University of Kansas has a money-making venture of its own with a 10-year, $18 million deal with Coca-Cola. Teresa Klinkenberg, KU's director of administration, said the deal was created in August 1997 to consolidate all the beverage operations.

The money is divided into three parts: One part goes to athletics; another to the Kansas Union beverage operation; and the biggest cut goes to fund scholarships. University employees' children have an opportunity to receive $1,000 scholarships. There are also National Merit scholarships, starting at a minimum of $500.

With February approaching quickly, Epps said he will consider how much a certain program will save if Nike provides uniforms and equipment. He said he prefers product rather than corporate sponsorship and that he has some reservations about being able to extend the Nike deal to all teams.

"That would be like hitting the jackpot if we got the all-sports deal," Epps said.

Leaders are needed for a stronger Senate

If Student Senate members are trying to figure out why they are so disconnected with the student body, they need not look any further than the minutes of their own meetings from last semester.

Most senators would agree that Senate has not accomplished much so far this school year. Or at least they should. As an editorial board, we struggled to think of anything of consequence the students' legislative body enacted.

Oh sure, there are the feel-good bills and resolutions it passed out. It threw its support behind the plan that soon will make North Manhattan Avenue a three-lane road with bicycle lanes. When it dealt with the Educational Opportunity Fund, money that benefits groups that are traditionally underfunded, Senate had a productive meeting and debated the issue passionately.

Aside from those pieces of legislation, Senate really doesn't have much under its belt.

It hurts when Senate is not being heard by other governmental bodies, either in the city or state. In previous years, resolutions that have expressed students' opinions on local and state issues have made headlines and helped legislators know our views. This year, hardly any of those resolutions have been written.

A reason for the lack of productivity could be the makeup of the body. Of the 60 senate seats open in last spring's election, 19 were won by students who didn't even file for election. They were write-in candidates named to seats with sometimes as few as two votes. Many of the 19 were weeded out, though — either because they didn't accept the positions, or they later quit.

Still, it says a lot about the leadership of the student body when senators are elected with two write-in votes. Some of those senators might not have the motivation of a senator who put the effort into actually running for office.

The low interest in elections and small amount of meaningful legislation creates the appearance that Senate, as a whole, is not motivated.

Senate's emphasis should be on issues that matter to students. The bulk of a meeting should not be spent on allocating money to small organizations or on passing useless legislation, like that which forces senators to stand in a booth in the K-State Student Union in a futile attempt to increase communication with students.

Students want their college life to be better. They want fees kept low and problems solved. After last fall — regardless of Senate's national ranking — they might want to look elsewhere.

A fresh semester offers plenty of opportunities for Senate to change its legacy. This semester brings issues such as the restructuring of higher education, the possibility of a library privilege fee and a review of the privilege fee for Wildcat 91.9 FM (formerly DB92).

Without strong leadership to tackle the tough issues, students will find themselves disenchanted and still searching for definitive solutions.

Hopefully, Senate will use this semester to find some.

"You look nice tonight, Becky." Make my heart melt. I love it when guys compliment me, when they actually notice me and take time to let me know. Even simple comments like this can brighten a person's day.

I went out on a date once where my date gave me flowers, took me out to dinner (albeit at Long John Silvers), then to the Garth Brooks' concert and finally out dancing. This was all on the first date. All through the evening he opened doors for me, let me enter first and shut my car door once I was in. It was so nice.

Now don't worry, Mom, your women's lib lessons weren't all in vain, and I'm not going to start talking about how having a nice, strong man around is so wonderful, but it's still really nice to be pampered sometimes.

Not all of my dates have been with Prince Charming, though. I've been on dates where the man has asked me out on the date, to dinner and a movie and then didn't even offer to pay for me. I don't mind paying, in fact I probably would have paid for myself anyway, but it's the principle. If you invite someone out, you should be willing to pay for everything. I try to practice this, too: for parties at my sorority where I've invited the guy, I pay for dinner and the alcohol, should we decide to have some.

These common courtesies aren't merely restricted to dates. People (both men and women) should practice these on a daily basis. They're called manners, for those of you who don't know.

My brother and I grew up in a household of manners. When my dad was growing up, his mother decided he and my uncle should go to manners school. So once a week they went to this Southern lady's house where they learned how to eat, walk and talk like gentlemen. All of this rubbed off on us. When at the dinner table we all too often would hear, "Don't put your elbows on the table," and "Sit up straight."

My brother's pretty good about not putting his elbows on the table, chewing with his mouth open or even talking with food in his mouth (my biggest pet peeve), but from my experience he's one of the exceptions, not one of the rules.

I've been to people's houses where they belch at the table and no one seems to think anything of it.

So here are some ground rules that apply to myself, but not necessarily all women. I hope these will help the hundreds of men who want to ask me out on a date:

1. Absolutely, positively no chewing with your mouth open or talking while you have food in your mouth. I can't stress this enough; I will walk out on you if you do it too much.

2. When in doubt, offer. If you're not sure if she would like to do something, ask.

3. If you asked her out to dinner and a movie, have a couple of ideas in mind of where to eat and what to see, but feel free to ask if she has any suggestions.

4. Girls, even if he asks you out, bring money, because you can't just expect him to pay.

5. Just remember your common manners — cover your mouth when you yawn, cough or sneeze; no elbows on the table while you're eating; say please and thank you; and unlock her door before you unlock yours.

I know this sounds like I'm harping, and a lot of you probably are asking yourselves who would want to date someone this high maintenance, but it's really not that hard to follow these rules.

I guarantee you're going to need these manners for more than just dates. Potential employers don't look fondly upon flatulence during a luncheon.

Questions of racism cast shadow on majority leader

VIEWPOINT

LEVIN

It turns out that one of Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott's old political stopping spots was the Council of Conservative Citizens.

As far as I can tell, Lott's relationship with this 15,000-member strong organization has been going on at least since 1991, when this senator from Mississippi made an appearance at the CCC co-sponsored Black Hawk political rally. In 1992, Lott told a gathering of the council in Greenwood, Miss., in his keynote address that "the people in this room stand for the right principles and the right philosophy. Let's take it in the right direction, and our children will be the beneficiaries."

Considering the size of this organization and the CCC claims of having members and supporters in various governmental bodies around the country, including school boards, city councils and state legislatures, one can understand why Lott and other conservative politicians like Rep. Robert Barr, R-Ga., would want to hobnob with this group and its leadership.

There seems to be one little problem though. The CCC is a group of blatant, unabashed racists. According to a Southern Poverty Law Center report, "Sharks in the Mainstream", the CCC was formed in 1985 by former members of the Citizens Council of America (also known as the White Citizens Council), an organization spawned in opposition to the Brown vs. Topeka Board of Education Supreme Court ruling that outlawed the "separate but equal" black/white school systems.

A quick look at the CCC's newsletter, the Citizen's Informer, or its Web site, www.cofcc.org, and there is no mistaking what the CCC truly stands for. Essentially, the CCC feels the white race and its white Southern culture are under attack by liberal Northerners (often referred to as Yankees) and black activists. The Web site is adorned with Confederate flags, much praise for Confederate historical figures and denouncements of the Union and all for which it stood (it claim that Lincoln was a homosexual with socialist and communist ties and that the only good thing that he did was to send some of the blacks back to Africa).

It is as if the CCC is still fighting the Civil War.

The CCC also has referred to Martin Luther King Jr. as a "depraved miscreant" (there has been much on the Web site attacking Dr. King, his holiday and Black History Month). Gordon Lee Baum, the chief executive officer of the CCC, was quoted recently in The New York Times that he believed that black people are intellectually inferior to whites. The chairman of the Washington, D.C., chapter, Mark Cerr, is really Mark Cottrell, well known in Britain for his associations with such neo-fascist groups as the National Front and its successor, the British National Party. The Washington Post quoted Cerr as saying, "I would separate the races by having non-Europeans sent back to the Third World."

The CCC Web site also has many links to other white supremacist Web sites. There can be no mistaking that these people are racist (although they like to refer to themselves as "racialist"), and they are happy to tell you so to your face. (Besides, they are kooky too; did I mention how they believe that the sovereignty of the United States is being taken over by the U.N.?) So how is it that Lott let himself come to be associated with such a hateful group? Could the Senate majority leader be a racist, too? (Like the CCC, Lott is also an admirer of Jefferson Davis and the Confederacy.) However, this group does possess an innocuous name and its members prefer to dress in suits and ties over the traditional uniform of bed linens or little soldier suits as used by many other "patriotic" organizations.

It might be understandable, if one stretches the imagination enough, how a person possibly could be fooled at first into believing the CCC is just your run-of-the-mill conservative organization. The leadership of the CCC has said explicitly that it try to pass the group off as mainstream and it use big name politicians to give their organization credibility. But the CCC is so obviously racist, you'd think it wouldn't take long to figure out what was going on, let alone the seven years it took Lott.

The Conservative Political Action Conference seemed to know enough to bar the CCC from its annual meeting. It was only after an article in the Post exposed Lott's long-term association with the racist organization that the senator's spokesman claimed Lott had "no firsthand knowledge of the group's views." Lott quickly distanced himself from the CCC and vehemently denounced the organization and its bigoted views.

If one gives Lott the benefit of the doubt as far as being a bigot, then is Lott so dense and stupid as to not recognize flagrant racism when it is all about? I find it hard to believe one can rise to Senate majority leader and be that vacuous.

The only other possibility left is Lott is politically sloppy. Two seconds on the CCC's Web site by Lott or one of his staff, and it would have been obvious that the CCC is a racist organization. How could it be that no one on his staff had not those two seconds in all those seven years to check out this group? Considering Lott's extreme disdain towards homosexuals, I'm sure Lott would never make the mistake of speaking in front of the Log Cabin Republicans. In any case, being racist, stupid and/or just plain sloppy — Senate majority leader is not the proper position for such a person as Lott.

READERS write

Reader says neither dog nor God belong on City Hall lawn

Editor,

After reading Sam Sackett's column in the Jan. 20 edition of the Collegian, I feel compelled to write this letter. Anyone with any knowledge of recent events in Manhattan will know Sackett's feeble attempt at satire was in regard to the issue of the Ten Commandments on the lawn of City Hall. While I think the Ten Commandments are all well and good, I do not think the best place to display them is at City Hall. The Ten Commandments are a religious work, and the best place for them is in a church. Or, if Sackett respects them so much, why not display them on his lawn?

I have heard some argue that the Ten Commandments are not necessarily religious in nature. Anyone who has read the first three commandments knows this is not the case. All three deal with God and the worship of God, which is a religious matter. To quote from the First Amendment, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof..." If the framers of the Constitution denied this power to Congress, you damn well better believe they didn't intend for state or municipal governments to have it either.

So when the elected officials of the city of Manhattan decide to keep the Ten Commandments on the front lawn of City Hall, it smacks of establishing or favoring one religion to the exclusion of others. How do we keep this from happening? Well, one way would be to invite other religious groups to put icons or other symbols on the front lawn as well. It probably would get crowded pretty quickly, and some people might take offense if the Church of Satan decided to put something up. However, to paraphrase from Sackett's letter: "It is not right that (one religion) gets (its) message and motto placed on public property while all the other groups don't have anything there. I realize that (the church's) message is nearly the same as most of the others, but that is no reason to discriminate." The best solution is to remove any religious symbols from City Hall, where they don't belong anyway.

As regards Sackett's column, his letter was off the mark, suggesting that anti-crime propaganda somehow equates with religious symbolism. Most citizens, if asked, probably would agree that a legitimate function of city government is crime prevention. Religious evangelism is not. Let the city stick to governing the city, and not preaching to us. If I want to be preached at, or see the Ten Commandments, I'll go to church. Again, to quote Sackett: "Just because that message is consistent with how most of us live is no reason to force it on everyone."

And remember, folks, "Dog" spelled backwards is God.

New lab to be ready by fall

By JENNIFER RYAN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The construction of a new gas machinery lab that began in December should be completed by August, said Kirby Chapman, director of the National Gas Machinery Laboratory and associate professor of mechanical engineering.

The lab, which is being built on three acres in eastern Manhattan's industrial park, will provide valuable experience to students in the College of Engineering. The lab will include testing facilities, office space and the Department of Mechanical and Nuclear Engineering's internal combustion engines testing facility.

"This will be a unique facility," said Traci Brentano, operations manager of the NGML and graduate student in mechanical engineering. "We will be able to run small engines, like those that come out of automobiles, helicopter engines, jet test cells from F-16s, and jet engines that are 100 horse power to 10,000 horse power."

The lab will employ from 30 to 40 students, both graduate and undergraduate. It also will help to make K-State one of two premier institutions for natural gas research, along with Colorado State University.

"This will provide a fantastic learning experience for students," Chapman said.

"At first, most of the students will probably be mechanical engineers, but we're looking to expand to become interdisciplinary and include both electrical engineering students and chemistry students," Chapman said.

The purpose of a gas machinery lab is to work with gas companies to make engines burn cleaner and become more efficient. All of the natural gas in the country is produced in southwestern Kansas or the Gulf of Mexico.

From these two areas, gas must be piped to other regions in 3- to 4-foot diameter pipelines. A compressor station must be present every 60 miles to pump the gas back up to a transmission pressure of 800 pounds per square inch.

Another gas machinery lab was built in Salina three years ago, but the interaction with students was minimal due to the distance between K-State and Salina. The other lab will be kept running until construction of the Manhattan gas machinery lab is complete. Nearly $2.5 million has been spent on both the labs.

The Manhattan lab has been financed by sponsors including Gas Research International, Enron, Elliott Turbo Groups, Kansas Technical Enterprise and the city of Manhattan.

Chapman said the courses taught at the lab will be supplemented with interaction with industry workers.

"We plan to teach short courses and have at least one industry person interact with the students during the course," Chapman said. "It's helpful to have students work with someone who's in the industry."

Brentano said incorporating industry personnel into the classroom assists the learning process in many ways.

"Any time industry workers are brought into the education process it's a good thing," Brentano said. "They can tell you from a practical standpoint if your views are way out in left field. It's a good reality check, and it helps to make contacts in your industry."

Officials encourage students to run for commission

By GINNY WRIGHT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students who get involved in city politics have an opportunity to get experience in government operations and have a say in policies in Manhattan and at K-State, Student Body President Tracy Mann said.

Justin Kastner, who graduated from K-State in 1998, is the only K-State student to be elected to the City Commission. His political achievements range from holding office in the Student Senate to holding office in the Manhattan City Commission. He is now studying in London after receiving the Truman Scholarship.

City Clerk Richard Doan said students who are interested in following in Kastner's footsteps must apply by noon Tuesday.

"There are several ways to file," Doan said. "You can file by petition by picking up petition forms from the city clerk's office and getting 50 registered voters from the city of Manhattan to sign it. The simplest way is to sign a Declaration of Intention in front of me at the city clerk's office."

In order to be eligible to run for the City Commission, applicants have to be able to fulfill a few criteria, Doan said.

A candidate must be at least 18 years of age and a resident of Manhattan. For election purposes, being a resident of Manhattan means the applicant's permanent address is within the city limits.

The City Commission is very involved in the way Manhattan works, Doan said.

"You need authorization from the City Commission to conduct the business of the city," he said.

Doan said the City Commission's duties include appropriating money to different organizations and city programs, giving authority in the signing of contracts, passing city ordinances, hiring and firing the city manager, and choosing the mayor.

Mann, who interned in the city's offices, said much of what the commission does directly influences life at K-State.

"There are a lot of things they do that affect students," Mann said. "Almost every issue that affects the city, affects the students."

When students run for political offices and win, it creates a positive atmosphere for the school, said Carla Jones, associate dean of student life. When Kastner was elected for office, Jones said it formed ties between the community leaders and the students.

"Having a student run and win showed community leaders how responsible students can be," she said.

So far, the city clerk's office has four candidates. If it doesn't get at least seven, it will pass the primary election and go on to the general elections. There, three of the candidates will be elected.

"They should do it," Mann said. "It is a huge, huge educational experience to gain."

Either way, three candidates are elected every other year, Doan said. The top-two vote-getters serve for four years. The third serves for two years. Kastner received a two-year term when he ran.

Jones said she encouraged students to run for the commission. This experience, she said, is for those who are interested in politics and being involved in their community.

"If we have students run, it would be very positive for the school," Jones said.

Doan said it is important to remember to file before Tuesday at noon. Anyone with questions about the City Commission or how to file to run for office should contact the city clerk's office at 587-2489.

Cats to battle Sooners for 3rd conference win

By JOSHUA KINDER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With K-State coming off its second Big 12 Conference win, Wednesday night against the Colorado Buffaloes, it now looks to keep the ball rolling against its next conference foe, No. 25 Oklahoma Sooners Saturday night.

"I can't speak for another team," junior forward Tony Kitt said in an interview after Wednesday's game. "I can only speak for us, but if we play like we played tonight, we'll win. If we cut down on our turnovers and we play as hard as we did tonight, we'll be OK."

The Sooners bring a 13-5 overall record and 4-1 conference record to Saturday's matchup, while the Cats continue to stay alive with a 13-6 overall mark and a 2-4 standing in the conference.

Junior forward Eduardo Najera, who stands 6 feet 8 inches, has been the mainstay for the Sooners this season with his 16.1 points 7.8 rebounds per game.

K-State coach Tom Asbury said Najera is going to be playing in the NBA someday and defending him is going to be a tough chore.

"He's really good," Asbury said. "He's a guy that looks like he'll end up playing for pay. He's really turned into a nice player, been able to step out and do some things on the perimeter."

Sooner coach Kelvin Sampson said Najera could play all five positions on the court, but Asbury didn't quite agree with him.

"I don't think he's a point guard," Asbury said of Najera. "I don't truthfully think he is qualified to play as an off-guard, but he could play any of the three front-line spots. That much I'll go along with."

To go along with Najera are four other players that average in double figures for scoring. Sophomore forward Ryan Humphrey averages 11.8 points per game, while senior Eric Martin puts in 11.1 per contest. Tim Heskett and Michael Johnson average 11.0 and 10.7 respectively for the Sooners.

The Cats leading scorer thus far has been Kitt, averaging 11.1 points per game while pulling down 8.9 boards per contest.

Rebounding has been a high point for the Cats this season. K-State has out-rebounded 16 of its 19 opponents this season. It is 13-3 in those games.

Despite Kitt's production, senior center Shawn Rhodes has been the key in conference play for the Cats. In K-State's six conference showdowns, Rhodes has scored in double figures in four of them for a 12.5 Big 12 Conference average.

The Cats improved to 10-1 at home this season with their win over the Buffs, but Oklahoma has been successful in road outings.

A chance at beating a nationally ranked opponent has the Cats excited.

"We're looking forward to this game," Rhodes said. "We know how good a team Oklahoma is. They're a tough team that plays well on the road."

"I think the older guys would like to go out with a win at home against OU. We lost to them in a pretty tough game down there last year, so we'd like to get them back this year here," Rhodes said.

K-State leads the series with 92 wins to Oklahoma's 88 wins. In their last meeting, the Sooners took the game 71-64 in Norman, Oklahoma.

Stopping Najera, Humphrey key to Cats' success

By RICHARD SMITH
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Wildcats will have some big problems to deal with when they tangle with Oklahoma on Saturday night.

A key to victory for the Wildcats will be stopping the Sooner tandem of forwards Ryan Humphrey and Eduardo Najera. This two-headed monster has been a key to Oklahoma's rise to fourth place in the Big 12 and to its recent debut in the ESPN/USA Today Coaches Poll Top 25. The tandem is wreaking havoc on opposing defenses this season, teaming up to average 28 points and 15 rebounds per contest.

The two forwards are the standouts in a balanced Oklahoma attack which features five players averaging double figures in points. The 6-foot, 8-inch Najera leads the team with 16.1 points and is second on the team in assists, chipping in 2.4 per outing.

As a sophomore last season, Najera lit up for a career-high 20 points in a 71-64 win over the Wildcats in Norman, Okla.

"He's a very tough player," Wildcat forward

Shawn Rhodes said. "He's an outside and inside threat."

Najera poses a threat in the defensive end, as well. The junior leads the team in rebounding, reeling in 7.8 per game, and is second on the team in steals with 35.

"He's really good," K-State coach Tom Asbury said. "He's a tough, hard-nosed player and extremely hard to defend."

Also of concern for the Cats is Humphrey. After earning honorable mention All-Big 12 honors last year as a freshman, Humphrey has continued to develop his game, boosting his average to 11.8 points per game this season.

In addition to his offensive talents, Humphrey uses his 6-foot 8-inch size to his advantage on defense. His 41 blocks on the season lead the team, as did his 86 total defensive rebounds. The sophomore is grabbing 7.4 boards per contest overall.

Asbury said the duo was a concern.

"They're both really strong and athletic," he said. "They really pound the boards."

Containing the pair might be difficult for the

Taking on the Tigers

Cats look to bounce back from loss

By NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State with, the Big 12 player of the week Nicky Ramage, will take on Missouri at 6 p.m. Saturday. Both the men's and the women's teams will face the Tigers at Bramlage Coliseum this weekend.

The women's team is attempting to bounce back from a 82-53 loss to Baylor. In the game the Cats shot just 35 percent from the field.

"We didn't come out prepared enough against Baylor," sophomore forward Brandy Harris said. "Hopefully we will be more prepared against Missouri."

K-State coach Deb Patterson said that in retrospect it was a team loss, with no one player stepping up offensively.

"It was the type of game that even after you looked at the tape you realize that no one player did particularly well on the floor," Patterson said.

Down low, the Cats faced a different style of defense from Baylor, a defense Patterson said collapsed three defensive players on the ball when it was passed inside.

Patterson said she expects the defensive strategy to continue against Missouri and throughout conference play.

"I think when you look at the numbers that particularly Nicky Ramage is putting up, you've got to expect that the triple-teaming will continue," Patterson said.

Ramage, a junior forward, has been K-State's leader in the paint, and last week she played an integral part in K-State's two victories over Nebraska and Texas. Ramage averaged 21 points and seven rebounds in the week's two games.

Against Texas, she scored 23 points and pulled down five rebounds. Down the stretch, Ramage hit clutch foul shots and shot 82.5 percent from the field.

Harris said Ramage is leading the team at this point in the season.

"Ramage is playing really well right now," Harris said. "She seems to be able to score at will."

Missouri comes Bramlage looking to avenge an earlier loss to K-State. The Tigers enter on a week's rest and are much improved under new coach Cindy Stein.

Stein was 65-25 at Emporia State, and has breathed new life into a program that finished last in the conference a year ago with a 3-13 record.

The Tigers are led by senior guard Julie Helm, who is averaging 18 points and 5.6 rebounds per game.

Helm and the Tigers got off to a fast non-conference start but have struggled recently and are 2-3 in Big 12 play.

One of the Tigers' losses came earlier this season to the Cats in Columbia, 72-60. It was a game in which K-State guard Kristin Rethman stepped up, scoring 12 points. Rethman has been on a tear ever since, scoring 19 points against Baylor.

Missouri leads the all-time series 27-25, but the Cats are 15-7 against the Tigers in Manhattan.

With a victory, the Cats can tie the number of wins they had last season in both Big 12 play and overall. Last year the team was 4-12 in conference play and 11-17 overall.

Improving over last year's season is a goal for the women's team.

"It is something that we think about," Harris said. "We always want to improve on last season."

Track teams hope to reclaim traveling trophy at annual triangular with KU, Missouri

Last year Missouri took home the trophy with a total score of 252.5, K-State was second with 237, and KU was third with 227.5.

By SARAH CRAIG
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The game plan is simple: do not lose. But for the track and field team, it might prove to be not so simple in this weekend's -MU-K-State triangular at Ahearn Field House.

By combining both the men's and women's team scores, the meet determines who takes home the traveling trophy that is given to the winner of the triangular. The field events get under way with the weight throw at 11 a.m., and the track events start with the mile run at 2 p.m.

K-State coach Cliff Rovelto said that while he slotted athletes in a manner that should allow the team to win this meet, a lack of depth on the men's team could make the meet a little bit closer.

"Our entries this meet reflect that we're going to do the best that we can possibly do to win this meet, but we're not going to sacrifice what's in the best interests of our athletes down the road," he said. "We may not double some people that would score more points for us."

"We're entering the meet in such a way that we feel fairly confident that if we just perform the way we can perform, we should win the meet."

Last year Missouri took home the trophy with a total score of 252.5, K-State was second with 237, and KU was third with 227.5. K-State has won seven of the nine meets in the past.

While last year's scores appear to be close, Rovelto said the international scoring of the meet makes it difficult to win by a large margin.

"You can win every single event but still get outscored," he said. "It puts more emphasis on the total team concept. It's tough to win by a lot."

The NCAA released a track and field power ranking this week. The ranking is a computer-generated system based on scores in various events. The ranking placed the K-State women's team first and the men's team eighth. The Missouri women are ranked sixth, men 14th; Kansas women are ranked 12th, men ninth.

Rovelto said Missouri would pose more of a problem than Kansas would.

"In terms of the total team, Missouri is probably stronger than KU at this point," he said. "Their strength is in the middle-distance area with both the men and women, but they have some good multi-event athletes and some good sprinters on the men's side."

Go ahead and reward the best players, but the worst football players of the year make the games interesting

VIEWPOINT

NEFF

With only one professional football game left this season, soon all that will be left is the traditional handing out of post-season awards. Unfortunately, most of the time the post-season awards are all too predictable.

For instance, who else but Randy Moss is going to win offensive rookie of the year? Get my drift? Besides, rewarding only the really good players is boring. So, being one who loathes the boredom of the ordinary, I bring to you a few "lesser-known" NFL awards.

The worst football player of the year was also People Magazine's sexiest athlete of the year: Elvis Grbac, quarterback for the Kansas City Chiefs. If it wasn't for Ryan Leaf, he would have been the worst quarterback in football, hands down.

That's all I can really say about him that wouldn't violate some Collegian rules. By the way, I think some of those Rollerjam girls are much better looking than Grbac.

Worst rookie of the year — speaking of Ryan Leaf, what was he, one of 15, one of 16 passing against the Chiefs? It's a good thing he didn't try to shoot himself in the head after that game, he probably would have missed.

Best comeback by a geriatric — Steve DeBerg, quarterback for the Atlanta Falcons. Probably inspired by John Glenn, DeBerg stepped in when Chris Chandler was hurt and played impressively.

The Greg Hill Award for worst impersonation of a running back — Ex-Hill teammate Donnell Bennett. The Chiefs could have drafted a real running back; they could have tried to sign Ricky Watters, but no. They wanted to convert a back-up fullback into a full-time running back. Gee willikers, whaddya know, it didn't work. Maybe next year they should pass up Ricky Williams in the draft and convert kicker Pete Stoyanovich into a running back.

Most disappointing team — conventional wisdom says I should pick the Chiefs or the Green Bay Packers for not living up to lofty expectations, but no siree, I'm most disappointed in the Denver Broncos because I want them to lose and lose badly so John Elway will finally retire. So what happens? They go to the Super Bowl. Forget my prediction from last week. Go Falcons.

Biggest quote to blow up in quoter's face — "We're going to go 16-0," said the not-so-wise Derrick Thomas of the Chiefs at the beginning of the season (pause while Neff's laughter subsides). He was only nine games off at 7-9. He also said he wanted to break the single season sack record (more laughter). Thomas, a Psychic Friend you ain't.

Best player whose last name contains a silent "H": — Wayne Chrebet, wide receiver for the New York Jets. The "Chr" is pronounced "Cr." I think he deserves an award for that, just listen how it rolls off the tongue. Say it with me, Chrebet, Chrebet, Chrebet. It's sort of like poetry.

There you have it, the best of the worst. That's what sports are all about. It's not the great players I like to see, it's the players who really stink that make the game interesting. Which would you rather see? Jerry Rice catching five passes, or Tony Gonzalez having five passes hit him in the head?

That's what I thought.

Milosevic averts end to cease-fire

Yugoslav president reverses expulsion order after Albright's warning.

By ROBERT H. REID
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELGRADE — The Yugoslav government froze an expulsion order against the American head of the peace monitors in Kosovo on Friday — backing down after the envoy declared he wasn't leaving.

In a statement distributed by the state-run Tanjug news agency, the government said William Walker could remain until the consequences of his behavior are fully clarified.

The reversal came hours after Secretary of State Madeleine Albright warned that the entire 750-person monitoring team would be pulled out of Kosovo unless President Slobodan Milosevic allowed Walker to remain.

The removal of the monitors would probably have meant the end of the tottering cease-fire between Milosevic's forces and ethnic Albanian separatists and could have paved the way for NATO airstrikes against Yugoslavia.

The decision sets aside the standoff over Walker but by no means signals an end to the crisis in Kosovo, a province in Serbia, the main republic in Yugoslavia.

Up to 2,000 people have been killed in fighting during the past year in Kosovo. Ethnic Albanians make up 90 percent of the province's 2 million people and most want independence.

In the past week, NATO planes have gone on alert for possible strikes against Yugoslavia and Yugoslav forces have continued an offensive in the province and prevented the U.N. war crimes tribunal from investigating the massacre in Racak of 45 ethnic Albanians.

"The fact that the Serbs have suspended their eviction of Ambassador Walker is a necessary but not sufficient condition to resolve the problems that President Milosevic has created," James Rubin, State Department spokesman, said.

He said the United States and NATO still insist that the monitors be allowed to operate independently, that Yugoslavia comply with Kosovo troop withdrawals called for in the peace agreement and permit an investigation by the U.N. war crimes court of the Racak massacre.

U.S. diplomats say that Milosevic remains defiant on most of the main issues regarding compliance with the Oct. 12 agreement, which ended seven months of fighting between government forces and Kosovo Albanian rebels.

While Walker sat tight, the U.S. special envoy for Kosovo, Christopher Hill, and Norwegian Foreign Minister Knut Vollebaek were meeting separately in Belgrade with Milosevic to urge him to rescind the expulsion order.

Vollebaek is chairman of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, which oversees the monitor mission.

U.S. spokesman James Pardew told The Associated Press that after more than four hours of talks, Milosevic remained inflexible on all key compliance issues and continues to deny Serbian involvement in the Racak massacre.

Hill spoke of lengthy, rather difficult discussions.

Walker had been ordered to leave Yugoslavia by 5 p.m. Thursday (11 a.m. EST) after he accused Serb police of carrying out the Racak killings.

Walker defied the order and remained holed up in his office in the Kosovo capital of Pristina. He canceled a trip to Belgrade and an aide said he would spend the night on his office couch.

The statement said it especially took into consideration appeals by Russian President Boris Yeltsin and U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan.

In her comments in Washington, Albright demanded Milosevic back down by complying with U.N. resolutions, reducing the Serb security presence, cooperating with the War Crimes Tribunal and permitting the verification mission, including Ambassador Walker, to operate unhindered.

Another target of Yugoslav defiance, Louise Arbour, the war crimes tribunal's chief prosecutor, was in The Hague, Netherlands on Thursday after being repeatedly blocked by Yugoslav border police.

She vowed the investigation into the Racak massacre will go on. "We will continue to do so with or without access to the territory," she said.

Scattered clashes were reported Thursday in Kosovo. Police swept through the village of Vraganica, 25 miles northwest of Pristina, and arrested four ethnic Albanians for suspected ties to the rebels.

Up to 2,000 people have been killed in fighting the past year in Kosovo, a province in Serbia, the main republic in Yugoslavia.

Ethnic Albanians make up 90 percent of the province's 2 million people and most want independence.

Recent success propels debate team to top-10 ranking

By CRISTY ANDERSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State debate team is ranked ninth in the nation by the Cross Examination Debate Association, an organization that ranks college debate teams each month.

The team earned its ranking after recent success in two tournaments during winter break. The team competed Jan. 5-7 at the University of Missouri Kansas City, and Jan. 8-10 at William Jewell College. Coach Susan Stanfield said the team was second in the two tournaments combined.

Varsity members Sarah Glaser and Isaac West placed fourth at UMKC and third at William Jewell in the team competition. Kevin Zollman and Josh Longbottom also competed as a varsity team at William Jewell and placed fifth. Seventy-four teams competed in the varsity open at the tournament.

"Debating as a team is much easier than debating as an individual, because not all the pressure is resting on your shoulders," Glaser said. "You can correct each other and help each other out. Two heads are better than one."

Glaser placed third at UMKC and second at William Jewell in individual competition.

Debate team members compete as individuals or in pairs. K-State has five teams that compete on junior-varsity and varsity levels.

Like the varsity team, junior varsity team members also placed in both tournaments. John Allshouse placed third, Nathan Dayani sixth and Paul Mabrey ninth at William Jewell. At UMKC, Melissa Newton placed sixth and Allshouse was 10th.

Junior varsity members placed in team competition as well as in individual competition. Dayani and Allshouse, and Kyle Wilson and Mabrey tied for fourth in both tournaments. Newton and Michelle Roddy, junior varsity members, placed fifth as a team at William Jewell. There were 24 junior varsity teams competing at William Jewell.

The debate team will continue competing in tournaments throughout the semester.

"Next weekend, we have a tournament at Southern Illinois University," Stanfield said. "The weekend after that, we are sending two teams to Northwestern University. This is traditionally the largest tournament of the spring semester, except for nationals."

The team also has two tournaments during spring break, one an invitation-only tournament.

Monte Stevens, assistant debate coach, said the team has shown improvement in the past year.

"Last year we didn't do as well as we hoped, but this year we are putting K-State on the map," Stevens said. "This is due to Sue's coaching and the leadership of the seniors, Sarah and Isaac, who help the younger members in addition to doing their own work."

The world's most popular ballet began life as a turkey, or at least an ugly duckling. The first performance of Swan Lake, at Moscow's Bolshoi Theater in 1877, was a disaster. The prima ballerina was an over-the-hill dancer who did not understand the Tchaikovsky score and interpolated numbers from her other repertoire.

Choreographers Marius Petipa, and Lev Ivanov reset the boy meets girl/swan tale for St. Petersburg's Maryinsky Theatre in 1895 and the ballet has been danced by companies the world over ever since.

Grammy-nominated Christoph Prégardien is widely regarded as one of the top lyric tenors in the world. He has sung with the opera companies of Frankfurt, Stuttgart, Hamburg, Cairo and Antwerp, and has made more than 30 CDs.

ACLU delays decision to file suit against city

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A movement to remove the controversial Ten Commandments monolith from city property has hit another bump as the regional board of the American Civil Liberties Union has further postponed the decision on whether it will accept the case.

The granite Ten Commandments monolith was a gift to the city of Manhattan in 1958 from the Fraternal Order of the Eagles, Aerie and Auxiliary No. 2468, and was placed on the city auditorium lawn. The city hall renovation that concluded last October left it in a more visible position near the city hall entrance, a placement offensive to several citizens.

The ACLU's decision, already postponed from a Dec. 6 meeting, could not be discussed since there was no Jan. 16 meeting, said Dick Kurtenbach, executive director of the ACLU of Western Missouri and Kansas.

The decision has been forwarded to the board's executive committee, who likely will make a decision in the next week, Kurtenbach said.

Although Kurtenbach said he could not predict the board's actions, he said the organization already has expressed concern over the monument. He said the implication that city government is far from being neutral on religion in the community is a concern for the organization.

Lyman Baker, K-State instructor of English and ACLU member who helped bring the suit against the city to remove the monolith from city property, said he is confident the ACLU will accept the case.

"Everything here is contingent upon their deciding to do it or not," Baker said.

Baker has gathered at least seven other plaintiffs and said he hopes the ACLU will have a press conference that will reveal the identities of the other plaintiffs on its decision early next week.

Until then, Baker said he's working to gather more plaintiffs.

In the meantime, another interested party, the Washington, D.C.-based Americans United for Separation of Church and State, became involved as well. Rob Boston, assistant director of communications for the group, said the interest is one they pursue nationwide.

"We are interested in setting a precedent," Boston said. "We want to make it clear that the government of the United States is secular. Our feeling is the government should be neutral in all religious issues."

Although it is not as equipped for litigation as the ACLU, Boston said the AUSCS would be willing to provide more specialized legal counsel. The ACLU covers civil liberties cases for race, gender, religion and others, but Boston said his group specializes in separation of church and state cases.

Local agencies worried by plan

■ Cities and counties fear Gov. Graves' tax promise will shortchange them.

By CARL MANNING
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Local governments on Thursday made clear their chief worry about Gov. Bill Graves' plan to eliminate property taxes on vehicles: Someday they could be shortchanged by the state.

Most vehicle taxes paid by Kansas go to local governments.

Graves' plan would eliminate the property tax on vehicles by fiscal year 2004 and replace the money it provides local governments with revenue from the state general fund.

A spokeswoman for the Kansas Association of Counties said local governments are leery of the plan and worry that the Legislature could repeal or reduce the promised replacement revenue in the future.

"We are concerned about the certain vulnerability we would face with respect to future Legislatures' decisions, which may or may not keep the pledge to keep counties whole," Judy Moler told the House Taxation Committee.

The committee's chairman didn't argue the point.

"Our history with revenue transfers hasn't been one to underscore trust," Chairman David Adkins said. "If the governor really wants his version, he needs to be working it hard."

Adkins said a competing plan by Rep. Tony Powell, also considered by the committee Thursday, would protect local governments better.

Powell's plan would continue the vehicle tax, but give Kansans a refundable income tax credit equal to what they paid in car taxes. Both plans would be phased in over four years, Powell's starting next year and Graves' starting in 2001.

"Broad-based cuts are the best way to go in providing relief and spurring growth," Powell, R-Wichita, said. "And it takes local governments out of the mix."

Chris McKenzie of the League of Kansas Municipalities said his group prefers Powell's plan, mainly because Graves' vehicle proposal "would require locals to be more reliant on the state," he said.

"We understand better how the money should be spent when it comes from the local level," McKenzie said.

Adkins said his committee will decide next month which tax relief course to take. The committee also will consider other tax-cut proposals, including reducing the sales tax on food and reducing the state income tax.

"The question is, where does the House want to peg the tax and the mix," Adkins said. The tax-cutting limit this year would be about $300 million, he said.

Fully implemented in 2005, Graves' proposal would cost the general fund about $272 million; Powell's plan would have a $264 million price tag.

Adkins said he prefers Powell's plan because it better protects local governments, but he said Graves' proposal would mean one less check Kansas would have to write each year to pay taxes.

"The governor proposes direct tax relief to the pocket, and Powell provides a coupon to be redeemed later," he said.

Because the vehicle tax was a campaign promise during the governor's re-election campaign last year, Adkins said he feels Graves' fellow Republicans in the House have an obligation to give his plan its day.

Concert with Variety

Mollie O'Brien to perform Saturday for BirdHouse series

By LYNETTE ABITZ
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mollie O'Brien knows music. And lots of it. O'Brien, who performs gospel, bluegrass, and rhythm and blues, will bring her variety of music styles to Manhattan when she performs as part of the BirdHouse Performance Series at 8 p.m. Saturday at the Manhattan Center for the Arts.

O'Brien has lived in New York and West Virginia and now resides in Colorado with her family. She said it is her background that attributes to her love of music.

"All those things have made me appreciate all types of music," O'Brien said. "It's obvious to some people that I have a varied background."

David Kamerer, BirdHouse founder and assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, said O'Brien has more recognition than past performers because she has played at the Walnut Valley Bluegrass Festival in Winfield, Kan., and sang duets with her brother, Tim O'Brien, who is well-known among fans of bluegrass music. She also is bringing a full band, which past performers in the BirdHouse Series haven't done.

"This concert will be great for blues lovers," Kamerer said.

He said a survey taken last year showed blues was popular among BirdHouse audience members.

However, O'Brien said she doesn't do just one style of music. She also said she enjoys singing gospel and rhythm and blues.

The 46-year-old musician said she has wanted to sing since she was a 5-year-old singing in church and at weddings. O'Brien said she had intended to study music education, but the major didn't appeal to her once she got to college. She then decided singing was something she wanted to do, she said.

O'Brien made three duet albums with her brother.

COURTESY PHOTO

Her strictly bluegrass recording, "Tell it True," was her first compact disc for Sugar Hill Records. The CD made the top 10 of "Gavin's Americana" chart.

Her latest CD, "Big Red Sun," is different than her past works.

"I wanted to make another record that was just me and three or four other people," she said. "I wanted it to be easily reproduced on stage."

O'Brien said the album is pure roots music, and that her favorite piece on the album is "Denver to Dallas," written by the late Judy Roderick.

"It's a rock 'n' roll tune dealing with what life gives you and making the best of it," she said.

O'Brien said she also likes the piece because she feels it sends a clear message.

"Every person is worth something," she said.

O'Brien said she plans to play all songs on "Big Red Sun" for her BirdHouse performance. She said she also might perform duet pieces she did with her brother.

As for what the future has in store, O'Brien said she doesn't have set plans for the next year. She said she would like to work on a record and perhaps perform at the Bluegrass Festival again.

"There is nothing else in music like Winfield," she said. "It is one of the best jam scenes in the country."

Tickets for O'Brien's performance are available at the Dusty Bookshelf, the arts center and at the door of the concert. They are $8 for students and senior citizens and $10 for others.

Kamerer said future performers for the BirdHouse Performance Series include singer/songwriter Dana Cooper on Feb. 20, guitarist Patty Larkin on Mar. 19 and the Celtic band Sunrush on April 10.

"THIS CONCERT WILL BE GREAT FOR BLUES LOVERS."

Internet sites allow surfers to shop with privacy, ease

By CORBIN H. CRABLE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

WWW.ABUNDANCENET.ORG/AUCTION.HTML

WWW.EBAY.COM

For fans of auctions, bidding has never been easier. And one doesn't even have to go to Christy's or Sotheby's to place a bid.

In recent years, Internet auction sites have given consumers the ability to bid on items from the privacy of their own homes, going head to head with fellow bidders from across the globe.

One of the more popular auction sites can be found at the world's largest Internet auction site to date, eBay, www.ebay.com, where antiques, books, movies, sports memorabilia and other collectibles can be purchased.

Users of eBay need a password to begin browsing; after users are logged on, they can browse for items, read feedback from others who have bought from various sellers and even chat with other buyers in the eBay chatroom.

Items are up for bid for only a few days, during which time users can decide to top the "high bid" price on the item. After the duration of a few days, the item is sent to the highest bidder. It is wise, most auction site users advise, to check the item upon receiving it to ensure it is in good condition. Users then can visit eBay once again to post any comments they had about their auction experience.

Other less conventional sites include the Buffalo Bill Internet Auction site www.scooppa.com, which specializes in western memorabilia, and Coin Universe, www.coin-universe.com, a site dedicated to coin collectors.

For someone with more discriminating tastes, there are sites devoted to selling antique books, paintings and watercolors, and fine wines, such as the Biddington's auction site www.biddingtons.com.

Probably the auction site for the person with money to burn is www.abundancenet.org/auction.html which specializes in auctioning off classic automobiles. Up for bids now is a 1952 MG (replica). Bidding for this automobile started at $11,000. Up for bids later this month will be a 1972 Lamborghini Jarama 2+2.

'Out of Site' proves good career move for Clooney

By RYAN DOOM
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

What do a federal marshal and a top-notch bank robber have in common? Usually not much more than the law, but in this case they actually do. They have love.

As tacky as that might sound, it is the premise for Steven Soderbergh's latest film, "Out of Sight," which is a blend of action, comedy and romance.

The story involves convicted but calm and cool bank robber Jack Foley ("ER's" George Clooney), who wants to make a break from jail. All arrangements have been made, and it is time for the escape to happen.

Waiting outside for Foley is his trusted accomplice Buddy Bragg (Ving Rhames from "Mission Impossible") with a getaway car. As soon as the break happens, there just happens to be a beautiful federal marshal, Karen Sisco (Jennifer Lopez), pulling up at the perfect time.

With search lights on, sirens blaring and officers running everywhere, no one notices when Bragg and Foley take Sisco hostage in the trunk of their car. It is in the trunk where, despite the situation, these two begin to make small talk and fall in love.

"Out of Sight" is yet another adaptation of an Elmore Leonard novel. Following in the tradition of "Get Shorty" and "Rum Punch," (a.k.a. "Jackie Brown"), "Out of Sight" focuses more on the characters' words and behavior than what they do.

The criminal element is just a mere part of the background in this film. Like "Pulp Fiction," the film plays like a jigsaw puzzle, piecing bits of the story together here and there. It takes about half the film to understand the entire plot, but it's fun trying to figure it out.

Clooney, until now, has made one bad movie after another with films such as "Batman and Robin." Here, Clooney finally steps into a role that he really makes come alive, and he becomes the strong leading man that he always wanted to be. He and Lopez are perfect together, and their chemistry is great.

The film is packed with an excellent supporting cast and a lot of fun guest appearances. Rhames is as good as ever, and Albert Brooks is looking like he never has before. Crime story standards like Dennis Farina ("Get Shorty"), "Midnight Run" make the film complete.

Even though the film obviously is inspired by "Pulp Fiction," it is not just another carbon copy of it. With quicker pacing, this film has made a voice for itself as a crime caper.

would randomly select 10 receipts and confirm the sale.

■ A detailed receipt from the printing company verifying the screening and application charges would be turned in with the expenditure report.

Senate has eight days to consider overriding Mann's veto, which requires a two-thirds vote. If that happens, Senate would pass the bill as it was written without any further amendments.

Ideally, Mann said he would like to see a new bill pass, but if it cannot be done by next week it will not go into effect this semester.

Election dates, though, will not be affected if the bill is passed in time. If it is not completed in time, this year's elections will continue to follow the old regulations.

"If no permanent change passes in time, then the old regulations will be in place," Mann said early Thursday.

"And that would be no change. They've been like that for several years," he said.

Ashley said reverting back to old regulations would make it easier for his committee, but it still creates a problem.

"It's really hard for my committee to run an ethical election because candidates can spend thousands and thousands of dollars," he said. "It says to candidates that you must campaign with T-shirts."

However, senators can draft a new piece of legislation on election regulations if they do not override the veto. The bill in its current form will be discussed in Monday's Senate Operations Committee meeting.

Business Senator Nick Mueeting encouraged senators to attend the meeting so they could write a bill saying exactly what they want.

"I don't believe right now our best action would be to override this bill," he said. "I'm not about to stop on this bill."

Allocations Chair Carlton Getz and Ashley said they want to keep things as simple as possible.

Getz said more regulations mean more interpretations of the bill and as many regulations as possible should be eliminated.

Even if the bill is passed, the Elections Committee will still have a lot of work to do in a limited amount of time.

Whatever the rules, elections will continue.

Information meetings for candidates will be held the last week of January. Packets and applications will be available in the Office of Student Activities and Services until Feb. 1 and the applications will be due Feb. 5. Expenditure reports will be due March 5 at 4 p.m. and general elections will be March 8-10.

you, I tell them. We old folks left the children a big job to clean up."

The source of this problem is American people know their place, he said.

"We know who we can mess with and not mess with," Gregory said. "You ain't gonna pick on nobody that's gonna pick on you back."

Despite society's ongoing problems, things changed because of white and black people who didn't sell out, Gregory said.

"We are all indebted to Martin Luther King Jr. and his family and what he did for us," he said. "He did not die in vain."

Dana Moore, senior in secondary education, said some of Gregory's comments could be considered overboard.

For example, Gregory was asked by the New York Times for his opinion about putting Malcolm X on a stamp.

"White folks finally found out how to lick Malcolm," he said.

Despite his outspokenness, many audience members said they appreciated his honesty.

"WE ARE ALL INDEBTED TO MARTIN LUTHER KING JR. AND HIS FAMILY AND WHAT HE DID FOR US. HE DID NOT DIE IN VAIN."

— DICK GREGORY, MARTIN LUTHER KING JR. OBSERVANCE KEYNOTE SPEAKER

"I've always looked up to him. He is a great person for his country and a great man for his people," said Travis Smith, who trains at Flint Hills Job Corps Center.

Moore said it was important not to take everything to heart.

"I thought it was very enlightening, but I don't think a lot of people understood what he was saying," Moore said. "He used a lot of things to open up your mind a little bit."

charges," David Kendall argued as the Clinton team completed its opening presentation.

Kendall's presentation was methodical, unrelenting and a stark contrast to Bumpers. He spared no words for the president's critics in denouncing the Whitewater investigation as "tortuous and meandering" and said he was before the trial to rebut what he called the rhetoric of the House prosecutors.

The final presentation came one year to the day after the Lewinsky allegations became public and thrust the presidency into crisis.

"The rule of law is more than rhetoric," said Kendall, who has represented the president through a variety of legal controversies. "It means that in proceedings like these, where important rights are being adjudicated, that evidence matters. Fairness matters. ... the presumption of innocence matters."

"The rule of law is not the monopoly of the House managers, and it ought to be practiced in these proceedings as well as talked about in speeches," he said.

In a closing statement invoking Thomas Jefferson and George Washington, Kendall pleaded with senators to cool the passions of the moment and cast aside the poisonous partisanship of the House impeachment vote.

"We ask only that you give this case and give this country the constitutional stability and the political sanity which this country deserves," he said.

The president's criminal lawyer focused his attack on the impeachment article accusing Clinton of obstruction, saying it was "based on circumstantial evidence, and that evidence is at best profoundly ambiguous."

His assessment of the House prosecutors' case was harsh. At one point, he ridiculed as "entirely untenable" Rep. Bob Barr's assertion last week that Clinton tried to get Lewinsky a job in New York to avoid a subpoena in the Paula Jones sexual harassment case.

"She was just as vulnerable to subpoena in New York as Washington," Kendall said.

He dissected in great detail the allegation that Clinton had encouraged Lewinsky to file a false affidavit in the Jones lawsuit.

With a touch of sarcasm, Kendall read Lewinsky's testimony that "no one ever asked me to lie and I was never promised a job for my silence." Then he asked, "Is there something difficult to understand here?"

Kendall noted that Lewinsky had testified she believed she was filing a true affidavit when she denied having sexual relations with the president and that Clinton showed no interest in viewing the affidavit before it was filed.

Senators will soon get their first chance to ask questions of the two sides, submitting those queries through Chief Justice William Rehnquist. That questioning is expected to begin today and continue Saturday. Some 70 questions have been submitted by Republicans so far, a GOP spokesman said Thursday.

Wildcats, who at times have struggled to shut down opposing front-liners since the start of Big 12 play.

In the Cats' four conference losses this season, they have given up an average of 36 points and 23 rebounds to the opposition's starting front court players. By contrast, in their two wins the Cats have held opposing big men to only 18.5 points and 9 rebounds per contest.

After previously yielding 29 points to Texas forwards Gabe Muoneke and Kris Clack in a loss, the Cats' defense stiffened in the win over Colorado this week, holding forwards Jamahl Mosley and Will Smith to 17 points combined.

MURDER

"To the Moore family: I'd really like to apologize," Bradford said. "I'd really like you to forgive me for ever taking part in this. ... I'm going to have to live with this for the rest of my life."

"I'm glad to be in this courtroom to clear my mind about what happened," he said.

The apology angered Joyce Moore, Kyle Moore's mother, who was sitting in the front row with her husband, Christine Moore's parents and other relatives and friends.

"I can never forgive you," she said, before leaving her seat and rushing from the courtroom.

Bradford, whose trial was moved to Manhattan, was the only witness called by the defense, and he spent about 4 1/2 hours on the stand Wednesday. He admitted hitting Kyle Moore with an unloaded gun he carried into the home but denied stabbing or shooting either victim.

Verge admitted at his trial to selling drugs. Prosecutors alleged both men had been smoking marijuana laced with PCP the night they killed the Moores, and that they had also dealt drugs in the Kansas City, Mo., neighborhood in which they lived.

Bradford testified that he and Verge had been drinking and using drugs at parties in Kansas City. Defense attorney Thomas Bartee said they hatched a "goofy plan" to drive to California to try and break into the rap music business.

They headed west and stopped for gas at Solomon, but their car got stuck after they missed the entrance ramp to return to Interstate Highway 70. They ended up near the Moore home and broke into it.

Authorities said they believe the Moores were shot to death with a .22-caliber pistol kept in their bedroom and stabbed with a knife that came either from the residence or one of the couple's vehicles.

Bradford said that once inside he followed a light to the bedroom where Kyle Moore tackled him and pushed him up against the wall. The men wrestled, and Bradford said he began hitting Kyle Moore in the head with the empty gun.

He said he heard gunshots and saw Verge shoot Christine Moore in the head.

Bradford said Kyle Moore leaped to shield his wife's body with his own. Bradford said he then went in the bathroom, heard more shots, and when he returned to the bedroom he saw Verge standing alone holding a set of keys to the Moores' pickup.

The men left but came back later to get keys to a second vehicle after the pickup became stuck in the mud near Verge's car.

Cristina Janney contributed to this story.

Library fee proposal presented to committee

By JENNIFER RYAN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dean of Libraries Brice Hobrock proposed a $1.70 per credit hour increase of student privilege fees Sunday as part of his five-source funding program for the library enhancement.

Hobrock met with the Student Senate Privilege Fee Committee to present a request to enact a K-State Libraries student fee that would total $685,000 for the 1999/2000 fiscal year. This fee alone would nearly double the current amount of total annual revenue to the library.

The fee would be similar to those enacted for Lafene Health Center and the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. If the request is granted, the new funds would go to books, electronic index and full-text journal databases such as Lexis/Nexis and single-article journal requests for undergraduates.

"One year ago we approached with the viewpoint that we were being eaten alive by inflation. This year we are focusing on what we want the library to be," Hobrock said.

Hobrock said the award-winning K-State debate team has used the University of Kansas' Libraries for a large amount of their research, checking out numerous books at a time. This year there is a move by KU to limit every non-university student to 20 books.

Hobrock said K-State does not currently meet the requirements for the Association of Research Libraries, which every other university library in the Big 12 conference meets.

The five components of library funding would include sponsored research overhead, growth in library-specific endowments, the KSU Foundation, university and state sponsored funding and the student privilege fee.

The research overhead money would be received as indirect cost payments for research grants and contracts to be skimmed off of all incoming funds. Under the request made by Hobrock, $250,000 would be provided annually from this source.

■ See FUNDING on PAGE 10

5-SOURCE FUNDING

Dean of Libraries Brice Hobrock has proposed a five-source solution to Hale Library's funding woes. A $2 per credit hour privilege fee would account for the student portion.

STRATEGY	1998-99	1999-2000	2000-01	2001-02	2002-03
State/University	$328,000	$685,431	$1,051,798	$1,427,324	$1,812,238
Foundation		$200,000	$300,000	$400,000	$500,000
Student		$685,431	$685,431	$685,431	$720,000
Overhead*		$250,000	$250,000	$250,000	$250,000
Endowment	$50,000	$100,000	$150,000	$200,000	$300,000
ANNUAL TOTAL	$378,000	$1,920,862	$2,437,229	$2,962,755	$3,782,238

*Overhead refers to funds received as indirect cost payments for research grants and contracts. All five components are either under consideration or implemented.

Million-dollar donor to be named today

By JOE HURLA
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The identity of the donor who is giving about $1 million to Hale Library will be revealed at 11 a.m. today on the first floor of the library.

Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said the science library on the first floor will be dedicated in honor of the donor at the ceremony.

The ceremony will feature speeches by President Jon Wefald; Nelson Galle, chairman of the Executive Committee of the KSU Foundation; and representatives of the donor's family.

Hobrock said the donor would not be in attendance because of his health, but said the opportunity to find out who was giving such a substantial amount of money should entice students to attend the ceremony.

"They could go out of curiosity, if nothing else," Hobrock said. "But this is a significant event in view of the fact that we are trying to enhance the funding of the library."

Trish Oakley, communications coordinator for the Foundation, said besides revealing who is donating the money, the exact amount of the donation will also be revealed.

She said the donation is about a million dollars, but the exact amount is still a secret.

Oakley also said the timing of the donation was important, since there has been so much talk about the library's problems finding ways to pay for itself.

"Students will be hearing a lot more about library funding in the near future," Oakley said. "This is a major gift to the library which represents funding for necessary materials."

Hobrock said despite this large donation, he would continue to search for other ways to improve Hale's situation.

He said he plans to push forward his request for a student privilege fee for funding and is always searching for new endowments.

But this donation, Hobrock said, will be an advantage for the library.

Both Hobrock and Oakley said they absolutely would not reveal the name of the donor, and interested students would have to attend the ceremony to ease their curiosity.

"We're playing this one close to the vest," Hobrock said.

Pope draws faithful to Mexico City

By VICTOR L. SIMPSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY — A million faithful packed a dusty Mexico City racetrack Sunday to hear a call to arms from Pope John Paul II — a summons to take to the streets and confront the challenge of Protestant evangelism.

The papal Mass was a powerful display of the aging pontiff's spell over this predominantly Roman Catholic nation. "Mexico, always faithful!" chanted the crowd, intent on showing the pope that their affection hasn't diminished since his first trip here in 1979.

Thousands of makeshift cardboard periscopes poked above the crowd so that those toward the back of the track, nearly a mile from the altar, could catch a glimpse of the pope.

John Paul urged his audience to ignore the seductions of what he called "fallacious and novel ideologies" and to spread the word of the church — a central theme of his visit, in which he has called upon his followers to aggressively combat significant inroads made by Protestantism.

"Don't fail to respond to the Master who calls. Follow him to become, like the apostles, fishers of men," the pontiff declared. "Make Christ's word reach those who still do not know him. Have the courage to bear witness to the gospel on the streets and in the town squares, in the valleys and mountains of this nation."

Few in the crowd complained about the cold, the overflowing portable toilets or the mounds of trash.

"It's worth it. To see the pope, anything is worth the sacrifice," said Miguel Duran, a 19-year-old student who peered into a periscope fashioned from a box of crackers and a mirror.

Later Sunday, the pope consoled patients at the Adolfo Lopez Mateos Hospital, a large public institution for state employees in southern Mexico City.

Mothers held their ailing children over a velvet rope in the lobby, and the pope embraced many of them and blessed others before going to the fourth floor to meet privately with patients with AIDS, cancer and other terminal illnesses.

Managers interview Lewinsky Rec to study pool addition

By LARRY MARGASAK
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — At a critical juncture in President Clinton's impeachment trial, House prosecutors interviewed Monica Lewinsky for almost two hours Sunday and asserted her testimony would help the Senate "determine the truth."

After a session that triggered partisan convulsions even before it happened, Lewinsky's lawyer, Plato Cacheris, said she added nothing to the record that is already sitting before the Senate right now.

Yet all three House managers who participated in the interview called the session productive.

"I believe she would be a witness that would help them determine the truth, and that's what we are all endeavoring to do during this process," Rep. Asa Hutchinson, R-Ark., said.

Cacheris said his client "was candid, forthright and extremely truthful" and that anything she told the Senate would cover familiar ground. He told the managers to tell their colleagues that it is unnecessary to call Lewinsky as a witness, so that her long nightmare could come to an end.

The House prosecutors were set to meet today, the deadline for submitting a witness list to the Senate. Senators then will debate whether to call witnesses before taking two votes: first on a motion to dismiss the case and then on the decision to take depositions of witnesses.

Earlier Sunday, three Republican senators said they wanted a swift end to the case and two of them expressed hope for a conclusion this week.

Republican Sens. Olympia Snowe of Maine, Slade Gorton of Washington and Richard Shelby of Alabama sought a fast conclusion to the trial. Snowe even said, "I think we will reach a conclusion by the end of this week" with a "chance to vote up or down on the articles of impeachment."

Gorton also said he hoped a solution could be found this week, said both parties should agree on a final vote and "get to it ... promptly." Shelby said, "Let's close this thing out. Let's vote on it up or down."

The prosecutors also indicated they wanted to talk to presidential friend Vernon Jordan, who helped Lewinsky in her job search. Hutchinson said he met with Jordan's lawyer "laying the groundwork ... in the eventuality that he is called as witness. And hopefully, I'll be able to talk to Mr. Jordan."

Separately, former Clinton political adviser Dick Morris was interviewed by House impeachment investigators. He said he was asked about his conversations with Clinton as the Lewinsky scandal was breaking a year ago. House managers, in presenting their case to the Senate, said Clinton's state of mind was important when he asked Morris for a poll on Americans' opinion of his conduct with Lewinsky.

Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, meanwhile, said he would go ahead with a plan to submit written questions to Clinton, even though White House lawyers, who first suggested the questions, now say the attorneys would respond rather than the president.

"We will continue to prepare a letter in hopes that the president will respond to the senators' interrogatories," Lott said in a statement. A response by Clinton attorneys "is not a substitute for the president answering the questions," he said.

In a move that shattered the Senate's bipartisan approach to the impeachment trial and caught senators from both parties off guard, Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr's

A study will begin in about two weeks to make decisions about building plans and funding for an aquatic center at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Recreational Services has considered the addition of an aquatic center to the Rec Complex for more than a year. Director of Recreational Services Raydon Robel said.

"There are a number of factors yet to be decided," he said.

Rec Services has consulted with an architect and a pool consultant on the project to get ideas for an aquatic center that will meet the needs of many people, Robel said.

He said Rec Complex users often ask where the pools are located at the Rec Complex and that many people think the Rec Complex should add pools to be a complete fitness facility.

Robel said the new aquatic center would be a big step up from the Natatorium.

"The current Natatorium opened up in 1973 and is getting up there in age," he said.

The proposed aquatic center would have several pools, including a lap pool, a leisure pool, a hot tub and an outdoor pool designed for lap swimming and sunbathing.

The pools will have different depths for differing exercise needs, and they will have various temperatures depending on the activities they are used for, Robel said.

"This center will be geared more toward today's time," he said. "It will be more attractive to people."

The new aquatic center would benefit more than college students and faculty. Dan Yunk, superintendent of schools for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, said there has been discussion concerning the need for better pools for local high school swimmers.

Many of the proposals at the meetings have allowed for high school students to use the new aquatic facilities for swim competitions, Yunk said.

Once the uses of the aquatic center are examined and preliminary drawings and costs are laid out, the issue will be presented to the Recreational Services Council, which is made up of students, Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said.

Student Governing Association will study the proposal further if it is favorably received by the council. If Student Senate agrees with the plans, it will need a favorable student vote to become a reality.

The aquatic center, which would be built on the east side of the Rec Complex, will be paid for by student fees. The plan includes possibly enlarging the locker space and adding more room to the weight and fitness area.

Robel said that if the plan for the aquatic center is accepted this semester, final planning will take place next year.

"If all were to fall into place, we could see an aquatic center by late 2001 or 2002," Robel said.

Murphy arrested on warrant for unpaid parking tickets

Frank Murphy's car has gotten him in trouble for the second time since his arrival at K-State.

The first time, it got the attention of the NCAA.

This time, it got him arrested.

At 11:30 Saturday night, the K-State football tailback was arrested on a Manhattan city warrant for parking violations.

Bond was set and paid at $50, said Captain Hank Nelson of the Riley County Police Department.

Nelson said he didn't know specifics, but he was confident it was just a matter of unpaid parking tickets.

"He probably just paid the fine and was released," Nelson said.

Kent Brown, director of Sports Information, said the arrest probably will have no effect on the outcome of the

MURPHY

NCAA case, on which a decision is still pending.

"It doesn't sound like that big of a deal," Brown said.

Brown said he expects to get word soon of the NCAA's ruling on Murphy's earlier case, in which Murphy accepted money from boosters to buy a car.

Several K-State representatives, including President Jon Wefald, Athletic Director Max Urick and Coach Bill Snyder, pleaded the Murphy case to the NCAA in November.

"We expected to hear back from them by now," Brown said. "Now we expect to hear from them in the next few weeks."

The decision is whether Murphy's NCAA violation was a major violation and whether either K-State or Murphy will have NCAA sanctions imposed on them for the incident.

Murphy could not be reached for comment.

Poor lighting, not alcohol, causes automobile mix-up

Jason Lantz woke up Thursday morning to find out that his friend had brought home something he didn't remember having the night before.

The wrong car.

Lantz, sophomore in pre-med, drove his brown Ford Probe to Bobby T's on Wednesday night.

Later that evening he decided to leave with another person, so he asked his friend Dirk Strickler to drive his car home for him.

Strickler agreed, so Lantz gave him the keys.

When Strickler, freshman in agricultural business, got home late that night, he could not remove the car keys from the ignition.

Lantz told him he would worry about it tomorrow.

"The next morning, I went to take a brother to work and realized that my car was not in the lot," Lantz said.

"I saw a brown Ford Probe similar to mine and, sure enough, my keys were in the ignition. But it wasn't my car."

Lantz reported the incident to the police, who had received a report of a missing Probe, and called a locksmith to remove the keys.

Lantz said Strickler wasn't drinking Wednesday; he merely didn't notice the differences in the dark lighting.

"Probe keys are fairly universal," Lantz said. "Dirk really wasn't familiar with my car. He probably just didn't notice."

Neither Lantz nor Strickler were charged with any crime.

CLARIFICATIONS & corrections

A story about the effect of the Builders Square Alamo Bowl on the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics budget in the Jan. 19 Collegian contained an error.

The first sentence should have read, "K-State's lower berth to the Builders Square Alamo Bowl didn't cause K-State any loss of revenue."

The Collegian regrets the error.

Olympic officials resign in bribe controversy

By STEPHEN WILSON
The Associated Press

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — Olympic leaders recommended the expulsions of six International Olympic Committee members Sunday in an unprecedented response linked to the biggest corruption scandal in the history of the games.

The embattled president of the IOC said the action was aimed at ending the ugliest chapter in the history of the world's biggest sports event, which in the last two decades has also become a billion-dollar business.

As a third member resigned in the scandal, IOC president Juan Antonio Samaranch said three other members remained under investigation, while a fourth was warned about his actions by the ruling executive board.

"The members violated their Olympic oath and betrayed the confidence put in them by the Olympic family," Samaranch said.

A six-person IOC investigative panel concluded its report Sunday morning into the cash payments, scholarships and other favors tied to Salt Lake's winning bid for the 2002 Winter Games.

The members were cited for accepting inducements — reportedly totaling close to $800,000 in cash and benefits — from Salt Lake boosters.

There also were reports of lavish gifts, free medical care and other improper exchanges between the members and the Salt Lake bidders.

One member, Jean-Claude Ganga of the Republic of Congo, received $226,000 from Salt Lake in cash, medical and travel expenses gifts, and entertainment, according to the IOC report.

Samaranch said the vote on the sanctions was unanimous and all six members had been asked to resign because they had done great harm to the Olympic movement.

"I express my deepest apology to the athletes, the people of Salt Lake City and Utah, the global Olympic family and the millions of citizens worldwide who love and respect the games," Samaranch said.

David Sibande of Swaziland was the latest member to quit in the scandal, handing his resignation to Samaranch just before the report was released. Two other IOC members resigned last week.

The other six were urged by Samaranch to step down "to put an end to the ugliest chapter in the history of the Olympic Games ... The greatest service to the Olympic movement is to accept their fate."

— JUAN ANTONIO SAMARANCH
IOC PRESIDENT

Samaranch said the 2000 Summer Games would remain in Sydney and the 2002 Winter Games in Salt Lake, despite the scandal that now encompasses both cities.

Samaranch said the IOC would form an ethics commission and continue the corruption investigation in other cities, going back to the bids for the 1996

Games won by Atlanta.

"We will do all that is necessary to preserve the integrity and ideals of the Olympic Games to restore the confidence of the public in the Olympic movement," he said. "This is the beginning, not the end of our work."

While he said he had no plans to Agustin Arroyo of Ecuador, Zein El Abidin Ahmed Abdel Gadir of Sudan, Lamine Keita of Mali, Charles Mukora of Kenya and Sergio Santander of Chile.

Still under investigation were Louis Guirandou-N'Diaye of the Ivory Coast; Kim Un-yong of South Korea and Vitaly Smirnov of Russia, Carrard said.

In addition, he said, Anton Geesink of the Netherlands had been issued a warning.

Members who resigned last week were Pirjo Haeggman of Finland and Bashir Mohamed Attarabulsi of Libya.

The late Rene Essomba, an IOC member from Cameroon who died last year, also was mentioned in the investigation's findings. It was news that his daughter, Sonia, had received a scholarship from the Salt Lake bidders to attend American University that touched off the scandal.

The IOC also had been expected to announce changes in the Olympic host city selection process, but it limited action for the time being to the choice for the 2006 Winter Games, to be made in June.

Carrard said visits by members to the six bid cities would be banned and leaders of the bid cities would be prohibited from visiting the committee members.

The selection of the city will be made by a committee that will not include the executive board, the single most powerful panel in the IOC, he said. The panel will be headed by Samaranch but the IOC president won't have a vote, Carrard said.

The process will be used as a trial for future votes, he said.

The IOC said six members appeared before the inquiry commission in person Saturday to defend themselves. They were not identified. Members who didn't appear were judged on written replies submitted earlier to the IOC.

Santander, one of the six delegates questioned Saturday, said he did nothing wrong and had no plans to quit.

"I am certain that I didn't act incorrectly at any moment," Santander said in Lausanne on Sunday, hours before the report was released.

Santander was implicated after Tom Welch, the former Salt Lake bid and organizing committee chief, said he donated $10,000 to Santander's campaign for mayor of a suburb of Santiago, Chile.

Manhattan skate park must jump liability obstacle to become reality

By CAIT PURINTON
Kansas State Collegian

Skaters finally might have a legal place to skate and jump obstacles without being chased away.

Manhattan Parks and Recreation has been researching opening a skate park in Manhattan. The biggest obstacle for the proposed skate park is governing liability and trying to find a place to insure the park.

"If we're not able to get insurance, the possibility of it happening won't be very good," Richard Allen, park planner, said.

Allen said they have been looking at other cities across the United States, and a lot of them do not have insurance.

He said if there was an accident or a claim, the city could be sued for up to $500,000 on each claim. Out of all the parks they have looked into, Allen said no claims have been filed.

Parks and Recreation Director Terry DeWeese said a lot of skate parks are self-insured through reserved money, so if they are sued they can pull money from the reserve.

DeWeese said the city is not self-insured, and they don't plan on being self-insured for just one activity.

"From our perspective, that's not a good way to go," he said. "We haven't given up hope, we're still trying to get that resolved."

He said they can get insurance, but certain requirements must be met.

The park must be supervised and enclosed, and skaters have to wear certain quality and amount of equipment. All skaters would be required to sign a disclaimer and the insurance policy would have high premium and deductible.

"It's not practical, financially, to pay for a supervisor for a skate park," DeWeese said.

He said the city can't afford to pay supervisors to be at the park all day every day. He said they want a park that has rules but is open to everyone.

While the city has been working on finding insurance, a committee of parents and high school students are looking into locations and equipment for the park.

Janet Benson, Manhattan resident and associate professor of anthropology, is the youth advocate for the committee. She said it doesn't seem fair that there is no legal place for people to skate.

She said it has been a problem for a number of years, and last fall when the parks and recreation department had a series of meetings on strategic park planning, she told her son it was his opportunity to bring up the idea.

"We need more forms of alternative recreation for teen-agers," Benson said. "It's a really good thing to have an idea come from the teen-agers. It should be something they want and something they see as a need."

Her 17-year-old son, J.P. Redmon, and his friends attended the meeting and took the idea before the Community Youth Council.

Benson said the council saw the need for the park and endorsed the plan. At the Sept. 17, strategic park-planning meeting, more than 100 people came to express their concerns for having a skate park.

"They've seen they can make a difference," Benson said. "It only takes a handful of people to make a difference in the world, and they found that out."

The youth on the committee have worked hard on the project and are looking into companies that specialize in obstacle equipment.

"The kids have been really professional and good to work with, and I think their main goal is to have a place to skateboard," Allen said.

Skateboarders and in-line skaters have been chased off the sidewalks and parking lots because there is no legal area in Manhattan to skate.

"They're not trying to destroy property, they're just trying to have fun," Benson said.

There is no definite site for the park yet, but the city has looked into several possibilities. CiCo Park, City Park and an area off south Manhattan Avenue by Wildcat Creek have been considered.

Allen said the skateboarders on the committee spoke favorably of a park in CiCo Park.

The park will cost about $70,000. Allen said the funding will come from several potential areas, including the parks and recreation department, the city fund, donations and grants.

"We feel pretty comfortable if we can find out how to get the park insured, the funding for the park will happen," Allen said.

The park will be on a 115-by-100-foot flat surface with obstacles. The inside obstacles include a concrete plaza with stairs and handrails, a concrete pyramid, split-quarter pipes, a concrete bank ramp, a concrete fun box, a steel grind rail and a half-pipe ramp.

Gregory speech won't spur radical changes

Dick Gregory is one of the most passionate and lively speakers in recent K-State history. His University Distinguished Lecture on Thursday stressed numerous issues that the country still has to deal with, such as drug abuse, violence and racism.

That said, his speech might have done a better job turning people away than uniting them.

While his words were sincere, they were often crass and painfully offensive. His criticism of K-State, including his disapproval of the football team's defensive unit referring to itself as a lynch mob, could have been better received if it wasn't stated as an insult. Specifically, he said, "I've got more integrity in my little toe than this university's got."

We agree that calling K-State's defensive unit a lynch mob is inappropriate. It's hard to believe Coach Bill Snyder would allow his team to use such a patently racist phrase as motivation.

No one can question Gregory's commitment to the civil rights movement. He has taken part in countless marches and rallies and was even jailed with Martin Luther King Jr. in the 1960s. It is easy to believe that when someone asks what he stands for, he smiles and says, "People."

But his speech made such gross generalizations and had so many mature topics; it was not appropriate for the two bus loads of elementary school children who were seated in the middle of McCain Auditorium.

For that matter, it's questionable whether Gregory's speech was appropriate as the keynote address of the Martin Luther King Jr. Observance. His message was lost in his rhetoric. It was not the sort of motivational, uplifting speech that would have capped off a tremendous week of celebrating King's message.

That's not to say his speech was bad, or that his message was wrong. It was just the delivery and timing of his speech that should have been more tactful.

The Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Committee did an outstanding job of scheduling a week's worth of events the entire community could take part in. But Gregory's speech, while powerful, was not the inspirational highlight it could have been.

Gregory got what he wanted from Thursday's speech: shock value and headlines. His speech, however, wasn't the kind that would motivate the K-State community to make lasting reforms.

MARRIAGE

More than just a word

Some people aren't ready for the great social adventure

My best friend repeatedly slammed his head in a car door over winter break. I'm sorry, I mistyped that. I meant to type "my best friend got engaged over winter break."

I know, the differences are cosmetic, but still, I like to shoot for that crystalline clarity. Besides, the delineation between bonding to another for life and self-inflicted violence is getting pretty vague in my eyes.

This is nothing against the lucky woman, not in the slightest. She's intelligent, quirky and just a little deranged (which should go without saying), a decent person to spend one's time with. However, my best friend is a pretty healthy guy. He's looking at a lifespan stretching at least into his seventies. Me, I'd be checking my watch after year one. "Hrm. Thirty-two years, six months, 18 days and 12 hours left, and she's still here."

I know I'm ignoring my honor-bound duty here. I should be forging a "Dear Rusty" letter in her handwriting, and kidnapping the young lady and shipping her to the desolate plains of upper Canada, then consoling my best friend as he drowns his sorrows, vents his spleen and poisons his liver, then watching as he begins the cycle again with someone new. That's the way it happens, right? Well, until people start swapping rings.

Relationships change at the speed of light. There was a couple in the hallway where I was waiting for a class to vacate my classroom. These young loves were bound and determined to stuff their tongues down each other's throat. For just a moment, there's that car-wreck curiosity/intrigue, followed in no short order by the "get a damn room" insistence, then a type of cold pity. At this stage in what must've been an embryonic relationship, these people could well expect the spark of all that is new and sensual in their relationship to burn brightly, powerfully 24 hours a day, seven days a week until the next impending millennium. This could burn them both out like flash paper or trigger their friends to get them roaring drunk and beat them to a pulp. Worse, there could come a day when they look at each other, the spark doesn't flood their senses and fails to shake the world, and they assume there's something wrong.

Eventually the class left my room (prompted, I think, by my incessant pleading and stuffing $50 bills under the door), so I didn't see the tonsil twins extract themselves from each other. For all I know, they're still tongue-tied, in the emergency room or Lafene Health Center, trying to explain their situation via sign language to a medical professional. I like to imagine them separated from each other, orally at least.

The tendency is to imagine the strength of marriage coming from the union, but it never shows better than in the distance between the couple. Ask a married couple a question. Do they look at each other before answering? Never a good sign. These are, nine times out of 10, the people who believed the hormonal surge and heart palpitations to be symptoms of that critical mental illness referred to as "love," when they're really physical phenomena, nothing that a cold shower and a pacemaker can't solve. These are the couples who page each other with five-letter messages like "ILUVU" and celebrate the three-year, two-month anniversary of the day they first saw "When Harry Met Sally." This makes me nauseated.

My friends, at least the ones who have gotten shackled to each other, are the ones who realize the integrity of the individual in such a relationship. While some run the risk of losing themselves in their mates, these people define themselves even more with the help of their newfound partners. They don't remain in 24/7 contact with the person who has sworn an oath to remain faithful to them, and sometimes find themselves physically removed from each other's presence for extended periods. Some might doubt, might let a whisper of insecurity about the relationship manifest, but the best realize that the person they chose to spend their life with respects and cares for them enough that there is no reason to let faith waver. Thus distance builds the bonds of a genuine relationship. It's better seen than explained, I think; I'll give names and addresses later. But these people are the refreshingly cerebral exception to the visceral, primal rule.

I've seen too many people look for vindication in other people, too much of, "Hey, this human decided to bind to me for life; therefore, I'm a pretty spiffy person" justification of their own existence. I've seen every single one of these relationships die in the most painful ways imaginable, and I'm sick of it. It makes a mockery of the oath, of the institution that should be the backbone of our culture, it destroys the mental well-being of our young and old alike; it demeans us all as a people. That's my job.

Rusty's wedding looms, not three weeks before the triggering of the Y2K experience. It will last at least that long, as he and the future missus already have done a good job of defining themselves outside their own relationship. Before then I'll watch a lot of people not nearly so lucky string each other along with illusions and empty promises, and I'll try not to laugh when the center cannot hold and things fall apart.

If you or someone you have passing respect for is suffering from fleeting fancy, tie them to a chair and kick 'em down the stairs. It's for their own good; remind them of this. Better a dented skull now than broken hearts, splintered dreams and severed vows. Make your choice carefully, and wait for the spark to die before choosing. The ring finger can be used to express a promise or advertise a lie.

Cousin's death reminds columnist to appreciate life

Going into winter break, I thought I had reached a level of maturity in which I understood life in general. However, not having ever attended a funeral for someone I truly loved and admired, and not having been to a funeral since I was 13, I did not realistically grasp how brief life can be and how unexpected and seemingly unfair death can be.

My cousin Luke died at 10:30 a.m. while I was having a cup of coffee with his mother, my godmother and super woman, Janet. Luke was 20, far from perfect, and a wonderful example of how we should all strive to be. Since I'm sure most of you didn't know Luke, I'd like to introduce him to you.

Luke died under the weight of a car in Olathe, Kan., five days before Christmas. This is fact, but it's a fact that we weren't prepared for because we all expected him to die in a totally different way. In Luke's 20 years, he had gone through two kidney transplants and a lifetime of pain and dialysis. My 42-year-old uncle Gary has suffered the same kidney failure and dialysis-filled life and is now in and out of the hospital every week. His beaten body is now that of an old man. Despite Luke's physical impairment and the fact that the future he had to look forward to was similar to what my Uncle Gary is experiencing, he didn't let life pass him by. His strength and good humor kept him going. While I'm apt to sit around and complain about my pounding headache and my soon-to-be-arthritis knees, Luke never sat around saying "poor me." He just lived.

Luke was also an incredible person in that he was a true individual who showed that different is not bad. The week that he died, Luke's hair was blue-black, as he had described it to his mother and I, and it was a different color every month before that. He was changing constantly, as we all should be. Luke was a guy who tried to convince my grandparents to listen to a little hip-hop at breakfast instead of the polka they listen to every morning in their schoolhouse home. There was nothing ordinary about Luke, and everyone, even my conservative family, loved that about him.

Finally, Luke was a true example of a human being in the way he acted towards others. As one of his friends said at his memorial, "There wasn't a person that Luke didn't like," and the packed room showed that. My younger brother, Blake, leaned over and told me he hoped that many people came to his funeral. I understood his comment not to be an acknowledgment of the importance of popularity but the importance of making such a incredible effect on as many people as possible.

Unlike so many of us, Luke had no discrimination. He even took in stride all the people who looked down on his unorthodox ways, holding no grudge, just peacefully co-existing with all.

That's not all. Luke's death is a reminder to savor every moment of life because you never know when something expected can take it away. It could be a car accident, it could be kidney failure, or it could be by being bitten by a rabid squirrel. It's hard for me to imagine dying tomorrow or to be pinned under a car just knowing that at any minute I would cease to exist.

My holiday was spent cherishing every moment with my family. As I spent time with Luke's brother, sisters and mother and watched them hold each other while standing over his body, it hurt just to imagine losing Mom, Dad, Jay, Blake, Kristen, Autumn or Chelsea. Without even one of them, my life would be empty. I've always loved them, but this death clarified that love. I don't know how many hugs and "I love you's" I gave out that week or since then to my extended family and close friends. Probably not enough.

While this column is therapy for me, I'd like it to mean something to you. I hope it's reminded you to savor your life and all the incredible people around you while you can, and let these people know how wonderful and inspiring they are.

It seems that I should explain my grand goals for the semester. We all know Luke — someone who loves freely, lives completely and is amazingly like no other. This semester I hope to find more of Luke in myself, and I hope you find Luke in others and within yourself. Embrace the Luke that you know and embrace the Luke that you are. Life is too short to stop living, to stop giving, to stop growing, and to not appreciate and respect the unique qualities that we all have.

Tom Clarke, I have news for you. The anniversary of Roe vs. Wade was on Friday. But thank you for the opinion you put in.

Library use is not a privilege, it is the core of the university. Earmark a portion of the annual tuition hike directly for the library, rather than calling it a privilege fee. We should have to pay for it, but not like we're doing the university a favor.

Will the person or persons responsible for finding the K-State basketball team please report to the Dean's Office for your reward.

READERS write

Columnist is right: future is bright for football team

Editor,

After hearing and reading hundreds of stories in the news media regarding the future of the K-State football team, it seems pretty obvious that Mike Vietti is the only sports writer with his head attached to the proper end of his torso.

Mike has said we have had some key losses, but in nearly every case there is a talented player waiting to step up and take the starting nod, unlike the rest of the sports world, which began playing taps for K-State's glory days on Dec. 30. Other writers were dwelling on the losses of players, rather than on who still will be here to replace them.

The truth is, the future is as bright as ever for the Wildcats — if they want it bad enough.

There is a precedent for it, and it just took place. The University of Tennessee lost some key players at the end of last year, including the first player taken in the NFL draft. But the Vols didn't lose heart. They wanted it bad enough. Even though everyone was saying they were in for a down season, they proved everyone wrong and won the national title. They won it because they wanted it, and they were willing to fight for it every second they were on the field. They didn't expect it, or wait for it to be handed to them. They went out and tore it from the cold dead hands of the Seminoles in the Tostitos Fiesta Bowl.

We have a history of expectations getting us in trouble. Three years ago, at the pep rally the night before the last game of the season, Southwestern Bell Cotton Bowl T-shirts were being thrown out. There was a Cotton Bowl costume contest, and a free trip for two was given away for the best sign. What happened? Colorado rolled into town, beat us, and we ended up in the Holiday Bowl.

Fast forward to this year. We're giving away trips to the Fiesta Bowl. T-shirts are being thrown out, and everyone expects it. We all know the ugly end to that story. Nothing comes free in college football; you have to go take it. Next year we will be underrated until we start killing conference giants. To the players who are graduating, good luck wherever you go. To the players who will return, the best is yet to come.

Band students set attendance record at annual clinic

Hundreds of high school band members filled McCain Auditorium with music Saturday during a rehearsal at the K-State Concert Clinic.

The sixth-annual clinic ran Friday through Sunday and was sponsored by the Department of Music.

Eighty-three high school band directors and more than 700 of Kansas' and Missouri's top young musicians attended. Frank Tracz, associate professor of music, said this was the largest group ever at the clinic. Five conductors from across the country came to rehearse and conduct one of five concert bands.

Participants were selected through a nomination and application process that began last November, Tracz said.

Darren Brooks, junior in music education, said the students arrived Friday afternoon and auditioned for band placement. Most of Saturday was spent in rehearsal, except for an hourlong master class where students were divided into groups based on their instrument and taught by K-State professors and band members.

Each of the five concert bands played the pieces it had learned over the weekend in a Sunday afternoon concert.

"I went to this clinic as a high schooler, and the format is still the same," Brooks said. "The only thing that has changed is the number of people. Three years ago there were only two hands, and now there are five."

Although participation was not mandatory, most of the K-State students involved with the music department helped with auditions, master classes, informational booths or other parts of the clinic, Shelly Neet, senior in music education, said.

"Pretty much everyone is involved," she said. "Participation was stressed by the department, but it has been a good learning experience for me. I have been able to sit in on the band rehearsals and learn different teaching techniques from the conductors."

Neet said the clinic is a good way to get information on K-State's band program and music department out to high school students.

She said there are information tables and scholarship auditions to encourage participants to think about coming to K-State.

"This is one of the best things we can do to get word out about our music department," Tracz said. "It is a great recruiter for us."

Twins die together after 86 years

Manhattan sisters with nearly identical lives die 4 days apart

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

From the beginning, Florence led the way, Kathryn always followed.

The twin sisters were born in 1913 in Bartlesville, Okla. Florence McKinney was delivered just before midnight on Jan. 12, Kathryn McKinney just after midnight on Jan. 13.

Eighty-six years later, Florence died in Manhattan on Jan. 16.

Kathryn received friends at the funeral home the day before her sister's services, and attended the funeral on the afternoon of Jan. 18.

The following morning, Kathryn said her goodbyes, too.

"I'm going to be with Florence today," she told the other residents at the breakfast table at Meadowlark Hills Retirement Community.

Three to four hours later, retirement home staff found Kathryn unresponsive. By late afternoon on Jan. 20, her heart had stopped.

The sisters' longtime friends said they had rarely seen the vivacious, sometimes dry-humored Florence without the quieter, more serious Kathryn.

"What one did, the other did," said Joye Ansdel, a close friend of the sisters since the 1940s. "If you saw one, you saw the other one."

Florence and Kathryn both pursued careers as educators after earning degrees at Kansas State Agricultural College in 1930.

Later, they both returned to K-State as faculty: Florence in 1937, Kathryn in 1946.

Neither woman ever married.

Although Florence moved to Oklahoma in 1954, she moved back to Manhattan to live with her sister in a house on Elling Avenue when they both retired in 1977.

"It was a quite beautiful relationship between the sisters," said the Rev. R.C. McConnell, the pastor at the First Presbyterian Church where the sisters were members.

McConnell led the memorial services for both sisters.

"They were close in spirit," he said.

In 1985, Florence and Kathryn moved to Meadowlark. They requested connected apartments and they drew a lot of attention.

"Florence always seemed to have a bit of a twinkle in her eye," said Steve Shields, executive director at Meadowlark.

"At times, you could see that twinkle working," he said.

Kathryn was just as energetic, but more intense, always focusing on the task at hand, Shields said.

"They were very energetic, very gracious," McConnell said. "Both ladies brought an incredible amount of joy to so many people's lives."

About four months ago, the sisters broke their hips within three days of each other — first Florence, then Kathryn.

They were moved into Meadowlark's health-care ward, but McConnell said they probably never fully recovered from their falls.

Florence always was thought of as the stronger of the two, Shields said, and for that reason some people were surprised she was the first of the two to die.

But Shields said that to him, it makes sense.

"She went to pave the way," Shields said.

And Kathryn, "very quietly in the afternoon, she went to join Florence."

New technology increases teaching options

By LORI OLEEN

Kansas State Collegian

K-State continues to update classrooms with technology to achieve its goal of providing a more active learning environment.

Sixteen classrooms have been renovated to meet a new standard for the future. Each technology classroom has direct access to the Internet and instructors are able to integrate multimedia presentations, videos and slides into lectures.

Eisenhower 228 is one of the newest renovations. Expository Writing 1 students can enroll in a computer section through the Department of Continuing Education.

"While students are working at the computer, the instructor can give help along the way and students are able to ask questions during the actual writing process," said Robin Mosher, assistant director of expository writing.

The course also uses a new software that is a computer-mediated writing curriculum called Interactive English.

"The setup really changes the teacher's role in the lab," said Mosher, who also taught a section of the course last fall. "There is more interaction at the computers."

Elizabeth Unger, vice provost for academic services and technology and dean of continuing education, said other classroom technology updates are in the works as funding becomes available.

"There isn't much money for this technology," Unger said. "We've been able to get some gifts and grant money to help. We haven't been able to make as much progress this year, because budgets are low."

Actual renovations fall into the Division of Facilities budget or the Crumbling Classroom Initiative.

"A lot of what we're doing is forefront design efforts and hasn't been done at a lot of universities similar to K-State," Unger said. "Even if it has been done, we have different space limitations and teaching styles that influence design."

Unger said a classroom committee of which she is co-chairwoman looks at each classroom and incorporates the users of that particular room to get input for technology improvements.

"The committee continues to work with the instructors who use the room for 18 to 24 months after renovations are complete to make any adaptations needed to the technology," Unger said.

Many of the new settings allow students to use teamwork and more discussion, Unger said.

The committee is working on an immersion environment, Unger said. Two possibilities for immersion use include virtual flying at K-State-Salina and either in Seaton Hall or Fiedler Hall.

"A step toward immersion, but cheaper, is incorporating three-dimensional imaging," Unger said. "This could be done as early as next year. There are a lot of different ways to enhance learning right now."

KU streak comes to halt; Missouri upsets Jayhawks 71-63

By CRAIG HORST
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — Missouri seems to be the only team that knows how to win at KU.

Brian Grawer scored 16 points and Albert White had 15 as Missouri beat the 19th-ranked Jayhawks 71-63 Sunday, the first win by a league opponent on the Jayhawks' homecourt since the Tigers did it in 1994.

"The last couple of years we're the only ones to beat them," Missouri coach Norm Stewart said. "This morning coming over on the bus, I thought, 'If we can't beat them, who's going to?'"

But Stewart, the dean of league coaches in his 32nd year, refused to put any special significance in winning at Kansas.

"Twenty years ago, 10 years ago, I might have reacted," Stewart said. "But we're talking about 18-year-old, 19-year-old kids. I'm just really pleased for them. Other than that, my feelings ... It really doesn't matter. As a coach, we look at the schedule as 16 pods. This is one of the pods. You play that one. You try not to let that one affect the next one."

Kansas (13-5, 5-1 in the Big 12) had won 35 straight conference games since an 81-74 loss to Missouri on Feb. 20, 1994.

The Tigers (13-4, 4-2 in the Big 12) are the only conference team to beat Kansas since the Big 12 was formed, winning once each in 1997 and 1998 at Columbia.

Iowa had broken Kansas' overall home winning streak at 62 games, then the longest in the nation, on Dec. 8, winning 85-81.

Grawer found White open under the basket for a dunk with 54 seconds left to give the Tigers a 66-61 lead.

Kansas apparently was trying to trap at halfcourt but got its defense mixed up.

"We lost Brian a couple of times," said Kansas guard Ryan Robertson, a St. Charles, Mo., native who earned the ire of Missouri fans for choosing the Jayhawks over the Tigers.

"He was making some threes and I wasn't making mine," Robertson said.

"It is personally disappointing to me. I feel badly, like I let my team down. It was my shots at the end that I didn't make that might have made a difference. I've got to think on a different night, I make those shots."

Nick Bradford had pulled Kansas to 62-61 with 1:59 to play, but Jeff Hafer scored on a pass from White with 1:29 left, and White made an open shot after Jeff Boschee missed a three-pointer for Kansas.

"It's a huge win for us," Hafer said. "We had great defense. We worked on it all week. It was one of those things where hard work paid off. We had blocks, steals — those things are going to happen when you work hard at it."

Kansas scored the first basket, but Missouri led the rest of the way in averting a sweep of the season series. Kansas won in 73-61 at Columbia on Jan. 11, when the Tigers shot 16 percent in the first half. Missouri lost at Colorado on Saturday before coming back to beat the Jayhawks.

T.J. Pugh matched his career-high with 13 points, but had only two in the second half. Eric Chenoweth also had 13 points and 13 rebounds.

Consecutive three-pointers by Boschee and Kenny Gregory pulled Kansas to 57-55 with 5:20 remaining.

The Tigers led 61-57 with 3:43 left when Keyon Dooling made an arching jumper over the 7-foot Chenoweth, but Robertson put back a missed shot at the other end, and Kansas closed to 61-59 with 3:08 remaining.

Robertson, who scored 17 points with a career-high nine rebounds in the game at Columbia, had missed all nine of his field-goal attempts. Missouri did not lead by more than three the rest of the way until White's shot. The Jayhawks then were forced to foul in the last minute.

Strong shooting, solid defense help Wildcats beat Sooners

Combining a strong defensive effort and shooting 52 percent from the floor, the K-State men's basketball team topped No. 25 Oklahoma 66-51 at Bramlage Coliseum on Saturday night in front of the season's largest home crowd of 12,571.

Defense was the key as the Cats forced the Sooners to shoot a dismal 36 percent from the floor and kept them to a season-low point total en route to winning their second-straight Big 12 Conference victory.

The Wildcats never trailed in the game as they compiled season lows in both turnovers, with 10, and fouls, with 12.

"We played pretty solid and pretty tough," head coach Tom Asbury said. "Probably the best game against a good team. We can be a very good basketball team."

"We have to go out and play real hard and real tough. Tonight, everyone played."

Oklahoma head coach Kelvin Sampson attested to K-State's winning efforts.

"They're a good team," he said. "They played well today. They're aggressive and they force you to make plays. They've always been a good defensive team."

The victory gives the Wildcats an 11-1 record at home this season and puts K-State at 14-6, 3-4 in the Big 12, on the season.

Oklahoma, 13-6 overall, 4-2 in conference play, lost their third-consecutive game but still leads the all-time series between the two schools at 94-89.

Leading the way for the Wildcats was senior guard Chris Griffin, who poured in 16 points by making five of his eight shots from the floor.

Senior forward Manny Dies and junior guard Cortez Groves both put in 10 points.

"Chris was terrific," Asbury said. "He had a great line. He had four rebounds, too. I really need my guards to rebound."

"We have a quality and confident team, but we have to compete," he said.

Senior guard Michael Johnson paced the Sooners with 22 points, including a six-of-six effort from the three-point line.

Oklahoma stars Eduardo Najera and Ryan Humphrey were nearly nonexistent, as K-State held them to a total of nine points.

"We were really concerned about shutting the post players down," junior guard Josh Reid said. "We just have to come out and play with intensity. Now is the time we're ready to bear down."

The first half started off even, as both teams struggled to take the lead. Dies stretched the Cats' lead to five with 16:41 left by jamming home a pass from Griffin. The Sooners refused to go away, as Johnson hit two consecutive threes to put the game within one.

K-State kept its lead, with Reid soon burying a three to put the advantage back at eight. The Cats led at half-time, 35-27, after Tony Kitt slammed home a pass from Griffin.

In the second half, the Sooners cut the deficit to five off of another Johnson three with just more than 18 minutes to play. But it was all Oklahoma could muster as the Cats kept the lead for good by shooting 55 percent in the second half and making 70 percent of their foul shots.

Kitt said the largest Bramlage crowd of the season was a key to the Cats' victory.

"The crowd was great," he said. "They played a more important role than anything did. Tonight we came out and played hard. When we leave it out on the court and play hard, we win."

K-State will look to capitalize on Saturday's win against Missouri in Columbia on Wednesday.

Senior Manny Dies was not supposed to start in K-State's 66-51 victory over No. 25 Oklahoma on Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

Head coach Tom Asbury made an adjustment and inserted Dies into the starting lineup so he could guard Oklahoma's leading scorer, junior forward Eduardo Najera.

Asbury's instinct worked. K-State held Najera to three points, 13 below his season average, and Dies had his best defensive game of the season.

"Manny came up to me yesterday and said he wanted to guard their best player, Najera," Asbury said.

"That's the first time he's done that this year," he said.

In addition to Dies, the Cats' other post players held the Sooners' second-leading scorer, sophomore forward Ryan Humphrey, to eight points, four below his season average.

"We all were pumped up about the game," junior forward Tony Kitt said.

"We wanted to go out and shut down everybody," he said.

With the exception of Sooners senior guard Michael Johnson, who finished with a game-high 22 points, the Cats held every other Oklahoma player.

As a team, the Sooners shot just 36 percent from the floor and made only six of 20 shots from the post.

"K-State played well defensively in the post," Oklahoma head coach Kelvin Sampson said, "but we also didn't execute well at all, especially on offense."

Najera was frustrated throughout the game and fouled out with 6:58 remaining. He was quick to credit the Cats' defense, which held him to a season low in points.

"Every time we tried to make a move down low or drive to the basket, it seemed like their players were there," Najera said.

Senior guard Chris Griffin, who led K-State with 16 points, said he thinks the Cats' big men don't receive enough credit for the things they do.

"We really do have great inside guys, and it showed tonight," he said. "They all came out with a lot of intensity and helped us get a very important win."

K-State was allowed to play physically against the Sooners, as the officials whistled the Cats for only 12 fouls.

"It was like a boxing match out there," junior guard Josh Reid said. "We just had to go toe-to-toe with them."

K-State will face another scoring threat inside when it faces Missouri and forward Albert White on Wednesday.

White torched the Cats for 21 points in K-State's 78-73 loss earlier this season.

"We'll have to come out ready to play," Kitt said. "They beat us on our home floor, and we're looking to do that to them."

Although previous predictions fell short, Dies provides opportunity for redemption

VIEWPOINT

JOEL WHITE

When it comes to predicting sports, especially K-State sports, I am wrong most of the time. I admit it when I make a mistake.

Those who read the Collegian on October 3, 1997, might remember one idiotic sportswriter predicting a K-State win at Nebraska in the college-football pick-it line. I am that idiotic sportswriter. Final score — K-State 26, Nebraska 56.

Another one of my notorious blunders came when I made a friendly wager with my friend Jeff.

My prediction — Texas' Ricky Williams would rush for more than 100 yards and at least one touchdown against the Wildcats Sept. 19. Williams' line — 43 yards on 25 carries and no touchdowns. I lost a case of soda on that one, but at least K-State won the game.

My most infamous blunder occurred last July while I ran my mouth to my friend Scott. My revelation struck Scott profoundly, or maybe he thought it was absolutely ridiculous, so he had to write it down.

"On this day, July 19, 1998, Joel White predicts Manny Dies will be the best basketball player in the Big 12 in 1998-99," he scribbled on his notepad.

To me, the choice was obvious. Dies would be unstoppable.

The 6-foot, 9-inch, 230-pound monster left Big 12 Conference opponents battered and bruised last season. He averaged 18.1 points and 7 rebounds a game in Big 12 games.

I figured as a senior Dies would have a sense of urgency. His chance to be the best in the Big 12 improved even more when the likes of Raef LaFrentz, Paul Pierce, Tyrone Lue, Cory Carr and Corey Brewer went to the NBA.

What I didn't consider was that Dies' off-season knee injury, the extra attention from Big 12 opponents and the team's addition of Tony Kitt would affect his production.

Dies' numbers fell to a mere 8.1 points and 6.3 rebounds per game, and he has started only nine of the 20 games this season, which is something I must admit I didn't see coming.

On Saturday against Oklahoma, Dies exemplified what he has become — a role player. Instead of being the go-to guy of last season, he has become the elbow thrower, body checker, rebounder and defensive stopper.

K-State coach Tom Asbury said Dies pleaded for the challenge of guarding the Sooners' Eduardo Najera, who, going into the game, was sixth in the conference in scoring, at 16.2 points per game, and eighth in rebounding, at 7.8 per outing. Two and a half minutes before tip off, Asbury inked Dies into the starting lineup.

Dies negated Najera for nearly 25 minutes. The two rarely lost contact with each other as they banged forearms, chests and heads all afternoon, and Dies didn't allow Najera to touch the ball anywhere near the basket.

The frustration oozed out of Najera's every expression.

Najera fouled out with three points, three turnovers and not a single rebound in his 25 minutes on the court at the 6:58 mark in the second half.

On top of his defensive accomplishment, Dies' outstanding performance included 10 points, nine rebounds, two earth-shaking dunks and a couple of stitches in his upper lip.

The Wildcats have nine games left in the conference, and it would take a miracle to make Dies the Big 12 Player of the Year.

He might not even start the rest of the games if Kitt, who was averaging 11.1 points and 9.1 rebounds per game before Saturday, continues to be a force.

One thing that is for sure is that Dies sent out a message on Saturday to the Big 12 big men. He will make life miserable for them.

Here's another prediction: for the remainder of the Wildcats' games, both conference games and post season, nothing will come easy for whomever Dies lines up against.

Track teams place first at annual triangular competition

By SARAH CRAIG
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State track team gave Missouri and KU a friendly welcome this weekend.

K-State won the annual triangular meet by a margin of 30 points, scoring 265 total points. Missouri came in second with 235, and KU finished last with 193.

The meet improved the men's team NCAA ranking to third, while the women's team maintained its first-place ranking. Coach Cliff Rovelto said while the goal for most early season meets is not to win but to prepare for the conference and NCAA meets, the team wanted to regain the trophy.

"The intent was to win the meet, and we did that, so mission accomplished," Rovelto said. "In terms of individual performances, there were some very good performances, but this week happened to fall into a week of heavy training, so a lot of our athletes were pretty flat."

"What they did is what we had expected them to do, given their point in training," Rovelto said.

Highlights of the meet included high jumper Charles Burney, who set a new men's meet record, jumping 7 feet 3.25 inches. Rovelto said his performance was rather impressive considering the history of this meet.

"There have been a lot of very good high jumpers in the past 10 years of this meet, so to come away with the meet record is significant," Rovelto said.

Other highlights included personal records in the women's hurdles by Carmen Wright, first place, and Teena Clincy, second place.

Renetta Seiler set a field house record in the women's weight throw, while Emily Diederich set a meet record in the women's 800-meter dash, and the women's 4x400-meter relay also set a meet record.

Rovelto said many of the sprinters and jumpers have practiced fairly strenuously in the past three weeks, leading to weaker performances.

Senior jumper/sprinter Kim Ela confirmed this in her long-jump performance, which though it won the event, was not up to par for her.

"I felt horrible about that jump. It was a foot under my best mark," Ela said.

The meet combined men's and women's scores to get the final result. While some athletes were frustrated with their performances, others said regaining the trophy was satisfactory.

"The performance as a team was really good because we got the traveling trophy back," Brent Stover, distance runner, said.

"It was pretty exciting because we beat KU and Missouri, our two rivals. It's always good to beat those guys on the track, and we did it with a good solid team effort," he said.

K-State regularly competes in scored meets. Rovelto said they realistically can't expect to win all of them.

"We do these meets because we think it adds some dimension to our team and we like the competition," Rovelto said. "We can't expect to win every meet, it would destroy our athletes."

"This weekend we went in with the intention to win, this week it's not the case. All that matters is that we're prepared to do what we need to do at the conference championship."

*Firsova, Ramage lead Cats to victory;
Conference record improves to 4-3.*

STORY BY NICK BRATKOVIC ■ PHOTO BY STEVEN DEARINGER

The K-State women's basketball team went big Saturday, defeating Missouri 79-67. With a struggling perimeter game, the Cat's front-court stepped up and had four players score in double figures.

K-State coach Deb Patterson said she was pleased with the team's inside performance.

"It was important that we had all of our front-court players in double figures," Patterson said. "Whenever you can do that, you put yourself in a position to win a basketball game."

With the victory, the Cats move to 11-6 on the season and 4-3 in the Big 12 Conference.

Junior transfer Olga Firsova stepped up, blocking four shots, hitting a three-pointer and grabbing a game-high eight rebounds.

"I liked the competitive aspect that Olga brought to the floor," Patterson said. "She was willing to take contact, and as opposed to retaliating, she answered with her game."

Offensively, the Cats were led by Nicky Ramage, last week's Big 12 Player of the Week, who scored 19 points.

Ramage's points came at critical times in the game and helped the Cat's maintain the lead for a majority of the contest, a lead the Cats took with 16:51 left in the first half and never surrendered.

It was a first half in which play was stopped for 10 minutes when a malfunction with the shot clock occurred.

With the clock repaired, the Cats went on a seven-point run late in the first half. K-State built a 12-point lead going into halftime and held Missouri to 37 percent shooting in the half.

"We tried to do a lot of different things, and they handled it," Stein said. "We were trying to pressure the ball a little bit more, and trying to keep them from seeing the open shot."

Patterson said she was pleased with her team's ability to get the most out of every possession.

"I thought we were doing an exceptional job on the offensive side of the floor of maximizing our possessions," Patterson said.

Missouri came out in the second half and chipped away at K-State's 12-point lead. At one point, the Tigers cut the lead to three before K-State answered with a seven-point run.

"Missouri battled back very well, and I am looking for a game when a team does not make that type of run on us," Patterson said.

With seven minutes remaining, K-State went on another big run, putting the game away. Patterson said it was a run her team needed to make.

"It was a concern of ours that we needed to do that," Patterson said. "I felt as though we were letting them pick us apart on the weak side."

The Cats' next game is 7 p.m. Wednesday at home against Texas A&M.

Bishop, Williams help South squad to 34-14 victory in Hula Bowl

By BEN DIPIETRO
The Associated Press

WAILUKU, Hawaii — Ricky Williams ran for 114 yards and two touchdowns Sunday, highlighting the South's 34-14 victory over the North in the 53rd Hula Bowl.

Williams, the Heisman Trophy winner from Texas, carried 22 times and was named MVP for the South. He scored on a 2-yard run in the second quarter and put the South ahead for good with an 11-yard run early in the fourth quarter.

The North took a 14-13 lead when Cal-Davis quarterback Kevin Daft hit Kent State receiver Eugene Jones with an 8-yard touchdown pass with 39 seconds left in the third quarter. Baker also caught a 28-yard pass on the drive.

From then on it was all South, as K-State quarterback Michael Bishop marched his team down the field on a 74-yard drive, capped by Williams' second TD run. He dashed off left tackle and stretched the ball over the goal line with 11:05 left.

Bishop and East Carolina's Troy Smith put the game away for the South, hooking up on two pass plays for 74 yards. A 45-yard completion brought the ball to the North 19, and the two combined on the next play for touchdown that gave the South a 27-14 lead.

WILLIAMS

Bishop closed out the game's scoring with a 54-yard TD pass to Texas receiver Wane McGarity.

Bishop, the Heisman runner-up to Williams, finished 10-for-17 for 197 yards and two TD passes.

The North took a 7-0 lead by scoring on its first drive. Missouri quarterback Corby Jones and Utah receiver Daniel Jones capped a six-play, 79-yard drive with a 22-yard pass. The two hooked up on the drive for completions of 33 yards and 22 yards.

The South scored all 13 of its first-half points in the second quarter.

BISHOP

Tennessee kicker Jeff Hall kicked a 42-yard field goal after a 10-play drive stalled to put the South on the board.

Texas Tech cornerback Darwin Brown intercepted Montana quarterback Brian Ah Yat on the next series, giving the South the ball on the North 23. Williams ran for 12 yards on a draw, then spun through the middle for a 2-yard score with 9:07 until halftime.

Hall closed the first-half scoring with a 37-yard field goal after Penn State lineman Brad Sciole sacked Bishop for a 17-yard loss on a first-and-goal from the nine. Sciole was named defensive player of the game.

Daft was named MVP for the North after completing eight of 17 passes for 117 yards and TD. Michigan running back Clarence Williams led the North with 64 yards on nine carries.

Margo Kren, professor of art, and George Kren, professor of history, have their art work on display through Feb. 28 at the Manhattan Center for the Arts. Margo has paintings that were inspired from a trip to Greece in 1996 on display, while George has landscape pictures of Kansas on display.

Husband, wife display paintings, photos at Manhattan Center for the Arts

By NAOMI MCHUGH

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Margo Kren is a professor of art at K-State. George Kren, meanwhile, is a professor of history at K-State.

She is a painter. He is a photographer. What Margo and George Kren do have in common, besides being husband and wife, is that they both have their work on display at the Manhattan Center for the Arts.

Margo has been painting professionally for more than 30 years. She said she was inspired to be a painter and art instructor during her childhood by encouragement of her parents and teachers.

"My first-grade teacher told my mother that, 'I think you better do something with her. I think she is going to be an artist,'" Margo said.

Originally from Houston, Texas, she spent most of her life in the Midwest. In 1966 she received her bachelor of science degree from the University of Wisconsin and then went on to get her Master of Fine Arts from the University of Iowa in 1979.

Margo has had her work on display in numerous art galleries and museums both at home and abroad, including the National Museum of Women in the Arts in Washington, D.C.; the Deutsch-Amerikanisches Institute in Regensburg, Germany; and Universite Sainte-Anne in Canada. Her work also has appeared in such publications as "Helicon Nine," "Cut Bank," "New Letters," "Tight Rope" and "Stiletto."

Besides having her work on exhibit in many museums, Margo was awarded the Governor's Art Award of Kansas in 1989. She also received K-State's Distinguished Graduate Faculty Member Award in 1989.

Some of her recent work on display at the art center was inspired by a trip to Greece she took in the summer of 1996. While there, she photographed chapel boxes that were built along the roads in honor of the deceased loved ones of people in the area.

When she returned from Greece, she painted the images of the chapel boxes that reminded her of personalized graveyards in the small Texas town where she grew up.

George Kren got his start in photography as a child when he would help his father, who was an amateur photographer, enlarge photographs.

George has been photographing Kansas landscapes for almost 30 years. He said his landscapes are not lavish, and they still contain their own elements of wonder. He said, however, he doesn't photograph these landscapes for sentimental purposes, unlike other photographers.

His work also has been published and in shows throughout the Midwest.

The cover of the book "Landscapes," by Robert Sudlow, features a photograph of the artist that George took. George's work also has been published in "The Kansas Art Reader Quarterly." The Spencer Museum and Kansas Collection at the University of Kansas Libraries, as part of their permanent collection, feature many of George's photographs of Kansas artists well.

Though George said he enjoys photography, he said he never thought about pursuing it as a career.

"I never wanted to major in art. I always wanted to be a history professor," he said.

The Krens' works will be on display in the gallery of the Manhattan Center for the Arts until Feb. 28.

Finding places to worship proves difficult for students

By JUSTIN VANNEST

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Colleges and universities attract students to their campuses from different countries and varied faiths. Sometimes it is difficult for these students to find places to worship.

Alan Aubert, program coordinator for the International Student Center, said that although many students on campus are members of diverse religions, he thought it was difficult for them to find places of worship.

"The Manhattan community is fortunate for the Muslim students and the Jewish congregation," Aubert said. "It is more difficult for faiths other than those. It is hard to find communities and places of worship."

However, Aubert said he thought the international students provide variety at K-State, and that diversity includes religion.

"We have a very diverse student population," Aubert said. "We have students from over 100 different countries, and there is a reflection of that in the many different faiths."

Although there might not seem to be a significant number of Muslim and Jewish students on campus, there are places of worship for these students. Muslim students in Manhattan can attend services at the Islamic Center of Manhattan, 1224 Hylton Heights Road, and Jewish students can go to the Manhattan Jewish Congregation, 1509 Wreath Ave.

For those students who do not belong to these faiths, finding a place of worship can be more difficult, said Vineet Gill, graduate student in food sciences. However, he said, there are options nearby.

For those of the Sikh faith, which is celebrating its 300th anniversary on April 13, the closest place of worship is the Midwest Sikh Association Inc. in Shawnee, Kan.

Gill said that because of the distance between Manhattan and Shawnee, it is understandable if some students are unable to make the trip regularly. He said that if he doesn't have a chance to attend services, he has other ways to worship.

"I have audiocassettes and compact discs that have prayers on it I can sit down and listen to," he said.

The Midwest Sikh Association has two priests who are employed on a volunteer basis. Gill said these priests do volunteer work for the good of the community and for anyone interested in learning more about the Sikh religion.

"The Sikh community here is small, but they do it for anyone in the community," Gill said.

Closer to home, Betti Weiss, co-president of the Manhattan Jewish Congregation, said the handful of K-State students who attend the congregation have made a difference.

"I'm very happy with the students we have," Weiss said. "There are at least half a dozen students who are incredibly involved here. I'd always love to see more."

Those who need more information on where to worship can contact Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities in Holton 102 or by calling 532-6432.

New Dave Matthews CD gives fans 'exactly what they want'

By JEFF ELLIOTT

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Dave Matthews—vocalist, guitarist and namesake of the Dave Matthews Band—once again has given his fans exactly what they want.

On his latest project, "Dave Matthews and Tim Reynolds: Live At Luther College," Matthews and his longtime friend Reynolds deliver a solid set of masterful guitar playing and rich, soothing vocals.

The double-compact-disc set, released to the public on Tuesday, was recorded Feb. 6, 1996, at CFL Theatre on the Luther College campus in Decorah, Iowa.

The Dave Matthews Band is one of the last great bands that sounds better live—the way music was meant to be played. Nearly every venue that the band plays is sold out within a matter of hours, if not minutes.

Since the Matthews and Reynolds tandem hit the road in early 1996, it consistently has sold out auditoriums all over the country.

Matthews' touring success can be attributed not only to his music but also to his onstage charisma. Anyone who has witnessed a show knows that when Matthews takes the stage, he is in a world all his own.

Restless, hyperactive acoustic guitar riffs mixed with soothing lyrics about life, love, sorrow and happiness make Matthews' shows more than worth the $30 ticket price.

"Live At Luther College" is the latest installment of the Dave Matthews Band live-performance series.

This 23-song set contains several numbers that are included on the band's 1997 release "Live At Red Rocks 8.15.95," another two-disc compilation. The band also has a 1993 release titled "Remember Two Things," which also is primarily live.

Only a few tracks on the album are previously unreleased. The acoustic set includes radio hits such as "Crash Into Me,"

of 5

"Satellite," "What Would You Say" and "Ants Marching."

Tracks such as "Dancing Nancies," "Two Step" and the crowd-pleasing "Warehouse" are the highlights of any Dave Matthews Band performance because of the energy behind the music and the powerful light sequences that accompany the music.

"Live At Luther College" is one of the best live CDs in recent history because of the songs it includes and the superior sound quality uncommon in most live recordings.

One doesn't have to be a diehard fan of the band to enjoy these CDs. Anyone who respects Matthews for his amazing musical abilities or appreciates exceptional guitar playing should pick up this CD set.

DiMaggio in grave condition

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Joe DiMaggio was in grave condition at his home, bedridden and using a ventilator, The Daily News reported Sunday.

The 84-year-old baseball great was released from the hospital Jan. 18 because there was nothing else the hospital could do for him, the newspaper reported, quoting an unidentified source.

DiMaggio spent 99 days in intensive care at Memorial Regional Hospital in Hollywood, Fla., after developing lung cancer. He is too weak to undergo chemotherapy.

Although DiMaggio reportedly walked out on his own when he left the hospital, The Daily News reported he was taken home on a stretcher. The newspaper also reported he is receiving around-the-clock nursing care at home.

DiMaggio's longtime friend and spokesman Morris Engelberg did not return calls Sunday.

DiMaggio entered the hospital Oct. 12 and had surgery two days later to remove a cancerous lung tumor. He then was stricken with pneumonia in his left lung and had fluid drained from his lung several times. He slipped into a coma last month and was given last rites.

DiMaggio's last public appearance was Sept. 27, when he was honored at Yankee Stadium and received replicas of nine championship rings that were stolen from his hotel room three decades ago.

The Yankees had wanted him to throw out the ceremonial first pitch at the World Series, but by then he was hospitalized. He celebrated his 84th birthday in the hospital Nov. 25, surrounded by family.

DiMaggio's 56-game hitting streak in 1941 is still considered one of the greatest feats in all sports.

POPE

"You are never alone in the face of the mystery of pain. You are with Christ, who gives meaning to everything in life, to the moments of happiness and peace, as well as the moments of affliction and pain," the pope said in a message read for him by a cardinal.

The Mass at the racetrack was the biggest event in the pope's five-day trip to Mexico, which has a special relationship with the pontiff rooted in a shared reverence for the country's patron saint, the Virgin of Guadalupe. An image of the virgin hung above the altar.

Hundreds of people arrived days before the Mass, and hundreds of thousands shivered in temperatures that plunged to 23 degrees overnight. The pilgrims were asked to stand at 5:30 a.m. to make room for the growing crowd.

As the sun rose, many kept warm by dancing, jumping in place and enthusiastically clapping to music played over loudspeakers. Still, hundreds of people were treated for hypothermia and other ailments, health workers said.

Amparo Anzures, a 75-year-old pilgrim from Puebla state, said the cold didn't bother her. "For the love of God, we didn't feel it because he is our blanket."

Sounding familiar themes, John Paul demanded respect for the human rights of Indians, ethnic minorities and the poor. He reiterated the church's ban on abortion and its emphasis on respect for the family.

John Paul began his fourth visit to Mexico on Friday. On Saturday, he announced a new strategy for the Church in the Americas: Catholics must struggle against the excesses of capitalism and the Church must try harder to reach the rich and powerful, not just the poor.

At each step of his visit, masses of emotional believers have cheered the 78-year-old pontiff.

On Saturday, John Paul celebrated Mass at Mexico's holiest site, the Basilica of Our Lady of Guadalupe, and met with President Ernesto Zedillo. On Monday, he holds a "meeting of the generations" at the Azteca soccer stadium, and he meets Tuesday with President Clinton in St. Louis.

office obtained a court order to help the House schedule the interview with Lewinsky.

Starr told reporters outside his home Sunday that his office took the appropriate action and was "not in any way participating other than responding to requests" from House managers.

For the second consecutive Sunday, many of the key players had a say: 21 senators appeared on the Sunday talk shows, as did five of the 13 House prosecutors.

Lead House manager Henry Hyde, R-Ill., said the interview, an often-used tactic in court trials to size up witnesses, was to learn "the kind of witness she would make."

In the now-rancorous atmosphere, the surprise move by House Republicans gave Senate Democrats a new opening to denounce the perjury and obstruction of justice case presented by the prosecution team.

The managers "are swinging wildly for the fence for a home run" to save a case "in serious trouble," Sen. Robert Torricelli, D-N.J., said.

The Lewinsky interview was injected into the trial just as the Senate faced crucial decisions this week and just as a bipartisan agreement governing the first phase of the trial was about to run its course.

Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., the chamber's respected expert on history and traditions, said he will move to dismiss the case. If that fails, senators would decide whether to call witnesses, initially for depositions. Most Republicans support testimony; most Democrats do not.

Several senators said they were intensifying work on means to end the trial and end the political gridlock that confronts the Senate: Republicans possess the votes needed to call witnesses, and Democrats hold enough votes to block the president's removal. It takes a two-thirds majority to oust the president but only a majority for other motions in the Senate, where Republicans hold a 55-45 edge.

On the Sunday talk-show circuit, Sen. Susan Collins, R-Maine, said witnesses "could be limited to only the obstruction of justice charge," because that's where the main conflicts in testimony exist.

Sen. John Breaux, D-La., acknowledging that Byrd's motion is unlikely to generate Republican support, proposed a "motion to dismiss-plus."

Pope arrives in St. Louis today

By JOHN RICE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY — A day after ministering to the masses, Pope John Paul II reached out to the rich Monday, celebrating a private Mass for bankers, politicians and other church patrons.

The Vatican also condemned the latest U.S. bombing raids on Iraq, just a day before the pope was to meet President Clinton in St. Louis.

At the Vatican's nunciature, or embassy, in Mexico City, well-dressed couples climbed out of luxury cars for the gathering, offering a stark contrast to Sunday's exuberant Mass before an estimated 1 million people at a dusty, trash-filled auto racetrack.

John Paul urged some 250 bankers, politicians, donors and charity leaders to "strengthen the spirit" by bringing religious values to public life, said Carlos Medina Plascencia, an opposition leader in the Chamber of Deputies.

The pope also urged them to remember Cardinal Juan Jesus Posadas Ocampo, who was killed along with his driver and five other people in a spray of gunfire at the Guadalajara airport while waiting to receive Papal Nuncio Geronimo Prigione in 1993.

The federal Attorney General's Office concluded that Posadas Ocampo was shot by mistake, confused for a drug lord by a rival gang. Catholic bishops here have rejected that conclusion — noting Posadas Ocampo was a well-known figure — and called for the case to be re-opened.

The pope and a cardinal distributed communion at the Mass.

Outside, dozens of people waited in the 35-degree cold just to be near him.

"We should all be together. Rich and poor come from the same Lord," 69-year-old Maria Angela Velazquez said. "We should all be equal, but there is no equality on this Earth."

"We must remember that we do not take money to heaven but our works and sacrifices. I am going to take the richness of spirit."

On this trip, his fourth to Mexico, the pope has stressed the need to preach to both rich and poor. Critics have contended that in recent years sectors of the church have swung too far toward a radical "preference for the poor" after favoring the powerful earlier.

On the pope's trips abroad he routinely has celebrated private Masses for political and business leaders and church patrons.

The pope leaves this morning for St. Louis where he will meet Clinton, speak to a youth rally and celebrate Mass before 100,000 people.

In what was expected to be an important point of discussion in the meeting with Clinton, the Vatican condemned the latest U.S. bombing raids on southern Iraq on Monday.

In a statement issued by spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls, the Vatican said the military action confirms once again the pope's belief that "military measures don't resolve problems in themselves, rather they aggravate them."

Iraq said U.S. missiles struck at least two residential areas in and around the southern Iraqi city of Basra and that several people were killed and dozens wounded.

Monday evening, John Paul was to preside over a farewell "meeting of the generations" expected to draw more than 110,000 to Azteca Stadium, Mexico's largest soccer stadium.

The event — John Paul's final public appearance in Mexico — was to feature TV hookups with cities across the Americas, from Los Angeles to Buenos Aires, Argentina.

The frail, 78-year-old pontiff has used his five-day visit to outline church strategy throughout the Americas for the start of the new millennium.

He signed a declaration containing

K-State students travel I-70 to hear universal message

By JOE HURLA
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pope John Paul II will speak to an estimated 100,000 people in St. Louis today and probably will never know that anyone from K-State was in attendance.

But to many of the K-State students who are traveling to St. Louis, it will be something they will never forget.

"For some people, it really does mean a lot to see him speak in person," said Father Keith Weber, priest at St. Isidore Catholic Student Center. "His message is very important to people around the world."

Bryan Kantack, junior in electrical engineering, said the pope's message was important to him because it had such a diverse appeal.

"We're all unified by God's love and our love for each other," Kantack said. "The pope stands for universal love."

Kantack is making the trip to St. Louis along with several other K-State students, many of whom attend St. Isidore with him.

He said he had wanted to go ever since he first heard about the pope's planned visit but had given up on the idea because of the scarce supply of tickets.

Last week, however, his friend offered him an extra ticket, which Kantack said he gladly accepted.

Weber said it was a treat for those who were able to obtain tickets but not a big deal for people who weren't.

"You don't have to see him in person to hear his message," Weber said. "I can read, hear or see his

New urban music time slot causes controversy for KSDB

By LAUREN POSLADEK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KSDB-FM 91.9, K-State's student-run radio station, began playing urban music from 10 p.m. to 2 a.m. on weeknights this week.

This was a change from when the station used to play urban music. Last semester it was played during a program called "Jam the Box" from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m. on weekdays with the old format.

When the program style was changed this semester to mostly modern rock music, the show was originally rescheduled for 11 p.m. to 3 a.m.

Some members of the Black Student Union said they were upset the station didn't ask them before the change was made, and several BSU leaders approached the station last week to request the program be rescheduled, said Paris Rossiter, vice president of BSU and sophomore in general engineering.

Rossiter said the urban music program started because BSU asked for diverse music to represent more students in the K-State community, and it is important to minorities that diversity is kept in music selection.

"Music means a lot to cultural and ethnic groups. It's fine for them to add new programming, but the problem came when they decided to move existing programs," Rossiter said. "They should have talked with us first. We want it to be fair for everyone."

He said BSU wasn't happy with the new time because it felt most people were either sleeping or studying late at night. He said they met last week with station directors to ask that urban music be moved from the late night slot to 8 p.m. to 11 p.m. when more people could listen to it.

Rossiter said at the meeting they agreed to broadcast the program one hour earlier, at 10 p.m., for now. Negotiations are still underway.

However, Jeremy Claeys, junior in mass communications and program director for Wildcat 91.9, said BSU did not make a complaint and everything was straightened out between the two organizations.

"It was more a misunderstanding than a complaint by all means," Claeys said. "There was some confusion while we made the transition in our format over Christmas break, and some people thought the show was canceled. We met last week though and everything is understood now."

Claeys said the radio station moved the urban music segment up an hour as a result of the meeting. He also said he plans to meet with the same people again this week.

Late-night scheduling for urban music will not stifle representation of minorities in the station's programming, he said.

"Public affairs programming will become the minority outlet instead of music," Claeys said. "We are moving out of that and into talk shows and other types of programming."

President Jon Wefald speaks Monday morning on the first floor of Hale Library in a ceremony recognizing Dr. William R. Love, 1929 K-State graduate, who gave $1 million to Hale Library to be used for acquisition of library materials. "This large gift gets us closer and closer to having a kind of critical mass for a library home that is so important if you're going to be a library in good standing in the Big 12," Wefald said. "If you don't have a good library, you can't have a good university."

GIFT of Love

Donor recognized during science library dedication

By KELLY FURNAS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A $1 million gift to Hale Library came from Dr. William R. Love, a 1929 graduate in industrial chemistry, university administration revealed Monday.

Love was recognized at a morning ceremony dedicating the Dr. William R. Love Science Library, located on the first floor of Hale Library. Due to health reasons, Love was unable to attend. However, he said in a statement, "Making a gift to K-State is an honorable thing to do because the university gave me a good start. I wanted to give back to my alma mater and help out young students."

Of his $1 million gift, $600,000 will be put into an endowment for the acquisition of library materials, including books, periodicals and electronic media as recommended by the Task Force to Plan for Financing the Library.

Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said the remaining $400,000 will be broken up and used for other financial needs of the library.

"As we combine other funds—which will be announced in the next few weeks—with the Love endowment, there is an expectation that we can assemble a total of $1 million to be used for investment for which the income will be used to purchase library materials," he said.

Nelson Galle, chairman of the KSU Foundation Board of Trustees, said he hoped the gift would inspire others to give to the library.

"This gift should be considered as seed money to further encourage the Foundation, the Hale Library staff, the university administration and K-State students to cooperatively build the acquisition endowment for the library," he said.

Hobrock mentioned those groups as possible sources for funding Hale Library in his proposal to the Student Senate Privilege Fee Committee on Sunday. His plan depended on funds from the endowment, the Foundation, the student body, the state and the university, as well as funds received as indirect cost payments for research grants and contracts. According to the proposal, the library would be receiving $3,782,238 a year by the 2002-03 school year.

President Jon Wefald said Love's gift was the kind of donation needed to spearhead the library funding effort.

"This large gift gets us closer and closer to having a kind of critical mass for a library home that is so important if you're going to be a library in good standing in the Big 12," he said. "If you don't have a good library, you can't have a good university."

Love, who retired in 1977 from his dermatology practice in Dayton, Ohio, also had received a degree in biology from Kansas City Community College in addition to his degree from K-State. He received his doctorate from the University of Kansas Medical Center.

Love had numerous family members attending the dedication on Monday, including his nephew Bob Love, who spoke on behalf of his uncle and the Love family.

"He has lived a very conservative, humble lifestyle. He has been very prudent in his investments," Bob Love said in reference to his uncle. "He's 93 years old and has lived long enough where those investments have begun to multiply considerably. We're very glad that it was to go to a good use like this."

Student Body President Tracey Mann said he hoped the students would benefit not only from the gift but would learn from it as well.

"The first most obvious tangible benefit is that students will walk into this library and will be able to walk out with the resources and the knowledge that they came to get," he said. "That sounds pretty basic, but as things become more expensive, it's harder for the library to acquire the things they need. A gift like this directly helps students to get things they want."

"But also, a gift like this also inspires students to realize the benefits of hard work and dedication," Mann said. "A gift like this teaches K-State students the importance of giving back."

A plaque recognizing Dr. William R. Love's gift to Hale Library was unveiled during Monday's ceremony.

Senate locks its doors, debates dismissal of Clinton case

By DAVID ESPO
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Senate closed its doors Monday to debate a Democratic attempt to dismiss all charges against President Clinton and bring his impeachment trial to an end.

House prosecutors pressed their case for testimony by Monica Lewinsky and a shortened list of additional witnesses. Senators deliberated into the night in a rare secret session as the White House, confident of Clinton's ability to win eventual acquittal, announced it would ignore a written list of questions submitted by Majority Leader Trent Lott and other Republicans.

An attempt by two Democrats to open the debate to the public was rejected, 57 senators voting against it and 43 for it. A two-thirds majority was needed.

The senators began their closed-door debate after two final hours of arguments by the White House and House prosecutors on the question of dismissal.

Rep. Henry Hyde, the lead prosecutor, told the Senate that dismissal would mean that "charges of perjury, obstruction of justice are summarily dismissed, disregarded, ignored, brushed off — and these are charges that send ordinary folk to jail every day of the week and remove federal judges."

There will be continuing contention about Clinton's case, he said, unless the articles of impeachment themselves are brought to a vote.

"The case cannot be made. It is time to end it," said Nicole Seligman, a private attorney who has long represented Clinton and is part of his impeachment defense team.

No votes were expected before today or possibly Wednesday, but after more than two weeks, the first presidential impeachment trial in 131 years is approaching a pivotal moment.

House Republicans are expected to produce a formal proposal for witnesses today, to be voted on after the Democratic attempt to dismiss the charges.

A decision by the House prosecutors to winnow their witness list during the day marked an attempt to hold the support of wavering Republican senators whose votes will be crucial when the roll is called.

Unemployment rate down; Kansas below U.S. average

TOPEKA — Kansas' unemployment rate hit a 19-year low during December, dropping to just 3.2 percent, the Department of Human Resources reported Monday.

The last time the state jobless rate was that low was in November 1979, and the last time it was that low in December was in 1978.

Wayne Franklin, human resources secretary, said the state's average unemployment rate for all months during 1998 was 3.6 percent — also a 19-year low. The national average last year was 4.5 percent, he said.

Roofing material spill soaks up company's funds

Fifty gallons of tar-like roofing material was spilled onto Lover's Lane on Monday, causing traffic to be blocked and public safety officials to be called to the scene.

Jim Connizzo, vice president of Danker Roofing Inc., the company working on Bluemont Hall, said the spill was not caused by any employee.

"Someone walking by flipped a lever, and material leaked onto the street," Connizzo said. "Luckily, our employees caught it before it ran into the storm drain."

The spill's proximity to the storm drain brought Steve Galitzer, director of public safety at K-State, to the scene.

"This is a petroleum product," Galitzer said. "It's natural, so it will eventually break down. There is very little risk to the environment."

"Still, we like to clean it up as fast as we can. We're very cautious."

Connizzo said the spill was expensive for his company, although the material itself isn't extraordinarily costly.

He said the material only costs about $4 per gallon, but the time his employees spent cleaning it up was costly.

K-State SGA claims third top honor in five years

Student Governing Association has done it again.

SGA was named the 1998 Outstanding Student Government by the National Association of Campus Activities. This is the third time in the past five years K-State has won.

"We win this award every other year. We need to start winning it every year," said Gayle Spencer, coordinator of the Office of Student Activities and Services.

The winning application included the association's handbooks, brochures, newspaper clippings and one-page essays that answered questions about what SGA does, how it affects the students, how they work with administration and the community.

"It shows how K-State's student government tackles issues concerning the students," Jake Worcester, Senate Vice Chair, said.

U.S. missiles strike south Iraq, 11 reported fatalities

BASRA, Iraq — U.S. missiles slammed into residential neighborhoods in southern Iraq on Monday, demolishing homes as they killed at least 11 people, Iraqi officials said.

U.S. officials said its Air Force and Navy jets fired at air defense systems in response to reported threats by anti-aircraft artillery fire and by four Iraqi warplanes flying south of the 33rd parallel in violation of the flight ban in that area.

Pentagon officials said it was likely that U.S. jets targeting the Iraqi air defense installations misfired and that at least two missiles might have resulted in civilian deaths near the city of Basra.

Spokesman Navy Capt. Michael Doubleday said U.S. officials still were assessing the site damage.

The missiles hit five areas of southern Iraq, including the working-class al-Jumhuriya neighborhood on the outskirts of Basra, Iraqi officials said. Several homes in that neighborhood were destroyed, their roofs caved in.

Civilians worked late into the night to clean debris from the morning strike.

Ahmed Ibrahim Hamash, the governor of Basra, said two aircraft fired the five missiles that killed 11 people and injured 59.

The missiles struck in the morning, and Hamash said most of the casualties were women, children or the elderly because many men had left for work.

Hamash said there were no military installations in the areas that were hit.

"There is not even a police station there, let alone a military installation," he said. "The United States claims to be a humanitarian nation, but they are enemies of that concept."

87 dead, hundreds injured in Colombia earthquake

BOGOTÁ, Colombia — An earthquake struck western Colombia on Monday, killing at least 87 people and injuring nearly 850 as it toppled buildings across the country's coffee-growing heartland, police and radio reported.

The afternoon quake had a preliminary magnitude of 6 on the Richter Scale, according to the U.S. Geological Survey in Golden, Colo. Its epicenter was located in western Valle del Cauca state, 140 miles west of the capital, Bogota.

The damage toll appeared to be highest in Armenia, Pereira and Calarca — three cities near the epicenter.

"The center of Calarca doesn't exist. Only the hospital was left standing," truck driver Jose Marcos told Radionet radio.

Web site hasn't hurt stores — yet

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It is the beginning of a new semester, and by this time, most students have purchased their textbooks. However, unlike previous semesters, there are more options about where to buy.

Online sources, such as varsitybooks.com, are advertised as cheaper alternative when buying books. They also are advertised as being more convenient and hassle-free than local bookstores.

Jodi Gershoni, communications director for varsitybooks.com, said K-State has been a popular school on the Internet site, and the company is happy with the success from the university.

"What students are seeing on the Internet is more savings and convenience than what they could get from bookstores," Gershoni said.

Steve Levin, assistant manager of Varney's Book Store, said he has seen no decline in textbook sales compared to previous semesters.

"The online sources do not carry the full book list, so students will still have to come to us or the Union to get the rest of their books," Levin said.

Carrie Mitchell, K-State Student Union book division manager, said varsitybooks.com has not hurt the Union yet, but that's not to say it won't.

"We are informing students about why they should shop from us," Mitchell said. "We are making a conscious effort in buying more used books because if our 25-percent discount on used books beats prices for their new books, we will do it."

Gershoni could not give exact numbers on how many students had used VarsityBooks.com, but she said hundreds of thousands of students have used it across the country.

"Varsitybooks.com offers students course textbooks at discounts of up to 40 percent, and it helps them avoid the long lines and hassles of bookstores," Gershoni said.

Mitchell said she made a spreadsheet at the beginning of the semester to compare prices with varsitybooks.com and the K-State Union Bookstore. She said books advertised by the online source were less expensive than the bookstore is because online sources do not have to charge state sales tax on books.

However, when comparing prices of used books with tax from the Union Bookstore and books from varsitybooks.com with shipping and handling, Mitchell said the Union Bookstore was cheaper.

"Overall, students won't get the answers they need, the trained personnel or the supplies when shopping online," Mitchell said.

What some students are finding now when shopping at varsitybooks.com is longer delivery periods and books being out-of-stock.

Mitchell said the Union Bookstore gives a 10-percent discount on books that are not available and have to be reserved. In this way, students receive an incentive and will continue shopping on campus.

"This has helped sales incredibly, and it is a way to keep books going out of the store instead of spending money restocking them," Mitchell said.

Levin said students will continue going to area bookstores because of the convenience of buying everything in one trip and not having to wait for books to be shipped.

"Students can buy other supplies while they are getting their books," Levin said. "The online sources may have the big titles, but they don't carry all of the books the professors might ask for later."

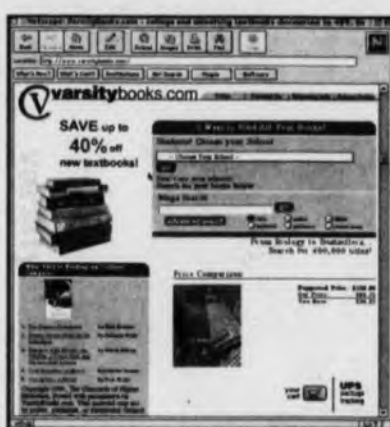

Both Varney's and the Union Bookstore have return policies for textbooks.

Money will be given that day for returned books, instead of the 30 days it takes to receive a refund from varsitybooks.com.

"We are just on the technological edge as they are, and we are looking forward to servicing K-State now and into 2000," Levin said.

Gershoni said even though numbers are low in using varsitybooks.com, students gradually will begin to become more familiar with it in the future.

"This is only the beginning and with each new semester, greater purchasing numbers will grow," Gershoni said.

Calcium helps blood pressure

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Doctors and researchers have said for years that by increasing calcium in one's diet, stronger teeth and bones will result. Members of the medical profession are now saying calcium also can help individuals with high blood pressure.

Lawrence Resnick, director of the Division of Endocrinology and Hypertension at Wayne State University, spoke to about 50 students, faculty and health practitioners in the Big 12 Room Monday about the effect of increasing the intake of calcium and the effects on hypertension or blood pressure.

"Everyone has different theories on why calcium decreases blood pressure in some cases," Resnick said. "My theory is different people are different."

Resnick said research has shown that by increasing the levels of calcium, vitamin D and other ions in a person's body, lower blood pressure has resulted. The correlation between vitamin D and the cell is vitamin D acts as a calcium channel-opener, allowing ionized calcium into the cell.

Although free calcium outside the cell is good, too much within the cell wall increases blood pressure. Therefore, individuals on high salt diets produce more vitamin D, which opens the cell and raises blood pressure.

"The more salt in an individual's diet causes the vitamin D levels to rise and increase blood pressure," Resnick said. Resnick said the effect of calcium also depends on what kind of hypertension an individual has.

This will influence whether blood pressure rises or falls when calcium intake increases.

"The result of blood pressure change to the diet depends on if they have high blood pressure and what type it is," Resnick said. "It is not a question of believing if calcium works to lower blood pressure, but what kind of hypertension one has."

One way to see if a dietary change can affect blood pressure is to find out if a person is salt sensitive. This means a person's blood pressure will change if lower salt intake occurs.

Studies have shown that people who stay away from salt have more calcium in their system.

"Calcium relative to salt causes changes in the circulation of ions, results in lower vitamin D, and less calcium in the cell which equals lower blood pressure," Resnick said.

Carolyn Andres, senior in dietetics, said Resnick's presentation answered questions of how calcium affects blood pressure and how to treat people accordingly.

"There is no one remedy that works for all people," Andres said. "The effects of calcium on high blood pressure depends on being salt sensitive."

Resnick said the best way to reduce high blood pressure is to eat more dairy products, not necessarily to reduce the salt in daily eating.

"You can tell people to not cook with salt, have no salt on the table and to not eat anything good," Resnick said. "However, most people will eventually revert back to their old ways."

Compromise will be key to library's future

The student body is tired of being hit up for money. So there will be a lot of resentment on campus when students hear Dean of Libraries Brice Hobrock's proposal to increase student privilege fees by $1.70 per credit hour. The average full-time student, taking 12 hours, probably would not be willing to pay $40 per year to save the library.

In turn, the fee most likely will not find the two-thirds majority of student senators necessary to create a new privilege fee.

Without strong leadership and a well-thought-out amendment to Hobrock's proposal, this fee will die, and the library will continue to suffer.

Last year, Hobrock presented an 85-cent-per-credit-hour proposal to the privilege fee committee. That bill died in committee and then died again in Student Senate when another group of senators introduced the bill.

Hobrock should realize that if a $20-per-year fee did not make it through Senate, a $40-per-year fee won't have any better luck.

The logic behind the proposal is also shaky. Hobrock's reason for doubling the proposed student fee is based on the fact that the state will double its funding next year. But most students don't look at the issue like that. Instead of trying to make the contributions equal, students will argue that their privilege fees should remain as low as possible.

While it's probably not the library's intention, the new, doubled proposal seems to punish students for their failure to pass the 85-cent plan.

When he supported the 85-cent proposal last year, Hobrock said it was students' fair share of the library funding dilemma. The subscription situation hasn't changed; students' fair share shouldn't either.

Hobrock's proposal would make students' share of library funding more than the combined projected efforts of the KSU Foundation, the library's endowment fund and the overhead received from research grants and contracts. A student fee shouldn't total more than the money given by faculty, private donors or especially the state to solve the problem.

Remember, students still are paying for the construction of Hale Library and will continue to pay for that construction for years to come. To ask them to pay to fill the inside of the library is a challenge. To make their portion of the funding comprise about 7 percent of students' fees is ridiculous.

At this point, a privilege fee will be required to get the library through tough times. Instead of pushing for an excessive dollar amount, Hobrock and the privilege fee committee should try to pass the 85-cent fee again this year.

The Collegian supports an 85-cent per credit hour privilege fee to fund the acquisition of resources for Hale Library.

Students are much more likely to listen to words of compromise, rather than sermons on sacrifice.

Pro-lifers shouldn't be lumped into one group

Editor,

In response to Tom Clarke's column, I really get tired of having pro-life people portrayed only as being right-wing and religious. Pro-life people come from various groups in society. I am pro-life, and I am not a member of a right-wing religious sect at all.

As a woman, I find being able to have an abortion neither freeing nor liberating. Women have fought and continue to fight being stereotyped as the "weaker sex." We fight to be paid equal wages for equal work. We fight to be recognized as intellectual equals to our male counterparts. We fight to make clear once and for all that "no" does indeed mean "no." The list goes on and on. How can we then turn around and, through abortion, destroy those who are the weakest? How can we then destroy those who are ours to protect?

A popular pro-choice thing to say is "a woman should have the right to do what she wants to her own body." I submit, though, that a fetus inside a womb is not an appendage of that woman's body. That fetus is someone else's body. Therefore, I do not see where we as women, we as a society, or those in the U.S. Supreme Court have any right to say it is OK to destroy that.

It also was stated in Clarke's column that women should be able to make their own reproductive decisions. I agree. Women have it in their power to prevent pregnancy before it even happens. There are various contraceptives available, and, when used properly, they effectively prevent not only pregnancy but also disease.

Q. DIVERSITY IN AMERICA CAN BEST BE DESCRIBED AS:

A.

B.

C.

DIVERSITY CAN'T BE DESCRIBED BY A SIMPLE METAPHOR

TODD PETERSEN/COLLEGIAN

Trick to diversity is forgetting differences

Columnist's experiences shatter melting pot myth

Imagine walking alone at night through a dark, deserted mall parking lot. A middle-aged man wearing jeans and tennis shoes approaches. You don't know this man works in mid-management at a large company and he has a wife and two teen-age children. You might fear this man, especially when you learn that he is a black man.

Diversity can be scary in a deserted parking lot.

The word diversity means something different to each person. For many in America, the word probably conjures images of the differences found in others; differences usually defined by race, culture or other demographics. For corporate America, it might invoke images of dreaded diversity training in which employees must learn to get along with their co-workers, even if the co-worker happens to be different.

Diversity classes are where you learned that America used to be considered the melting pot or a land where people from all over melted into a homogeneous soup. You might have learned it is no longer politically correct to consider America in this fashion. Now people say the United States is like a salad in which each person is a separate ingredient, and we are united by a common dressing or something. Both metaphors are ridiculous ideas that someone, somewhere, thought would help people reach an understanding about diversity. Both metaphors have it all wrong. The trick isn't to think how our differences flavor the world. The trick is not to think about our differences at all.

My experiences have led me to think of diversity in a new way—a way that might make on-the-job diversity training and discussions at schools and universities easier. When I consider the word diversity, I think of all the things I have in common with any one person.

My parents met in college and married shortly after my father's graduation. My mother is a homemaker with a successful writing career, and my father wears a suit and tie to work. I grew up in a charming house in the 'burbs'. We had a cute dog. My family easily could have been the inspiration for "Leave It To Beaver" except for a few, small details. My mother never wears high heels around the house, and my father is black.

I was considered different in my community and in my town. I had a black parent. In kindergarten, the other kids rarely spoke to me. My mother told me to be myself and eventually they would accept me. She said it is easy for people to hate or ignore those that they do not know or understand. She promised that if I was always kind and generous, the other kids would come around. She was right.

My brother and I were the only black children in our school district until I entered the sixth grade. By that time, no one thought of me as a color. They looked at me and saw Danedri, just one of the girls in their Girl Scout troop or in their class.

Appearances no longer mattered to me or my elementary school peers. However, blinding everyone would not stop prejudice. I learned later that diversity includes lifestyles, cultures and actions, too.

Two weeks after I graduated from high school, I went to work with a summer stock theater company in Ohio. The theater company and Ohio were another planet to this Kansas girl. Some of the actors were gay, and I had no idea how to act around them. In the fashion of children in my kindergarten class, I avoided them as much as possible. Once heavy rehearsing started, however, avoidance became impossible. We talked before, during and after rehearsal. We joked about being different, but more often, we talked about being the same.

It took me six weeks to forget they were different. But I did forget. I quit looking at the frightening differences between us and started talking about the things we had in common.

Diversity lessons like these can't be learned in one day. They can't be learned in job-related diversity training, reading this column or by a professor of some diversity class. Diversity lessons certainly can't be learned sitting in separate sections of the K-State Student Union Stateroom.

You've got to move around the room and talk to someone who looks or acts differently than you do. You'll find that you have more in common than you thought. Your experiences will lead you to a definition of diversity that is probably a lot like mine.

Love affair with e-mail crosses the line of obsession, addiction

I love e-mail; I admit it. I can't get enough of it. I just love it. It is the best invention since peanut butter and jelly. E-mail to me is like a doughnut to Homer Simpson. Neither of us can get enough; "Mmm ... e-mail."

It has gotten to the point where I simply cannot sit down at a computer without unconsciously clicking to check my e-mail. It doesn't matter whose computer it is, where the computer is or even if I just got done checking it.

Five minutes ago, I just have to check. It has become ingrained in my mind. Breathe, blink and check e-mail. In the morning, the first thing I do is check my e-mail. After I shower and prepare for class, it's e-mail checking time. Lunch is over, and the moments I have before going back to class I use to check that e-mail again. Of course, I've got to see it before I go to bed.

In the middle of writing assignments, I find myself reaching the end of sentence and checking my e-mail. It is second nature to me now. I feel like Pavlov's dog. Type a paragraph or two, check my e-mail. Type a paragraph or two, check my e-mail. In fact, since writing this column, I've checked my e-mail 67 times (wait a second, nothing, OK, make that 68).

I feel like a kid at Christmas when a brand-new message crosses my screen. I won't go into the dance I do when forwards show up. Ah, forwards. Is there a better feeling than to receive a message that has been read by hundreds of other eyes like yours and to have its fate hanging in the balance? You get to decide if the message is good enough to send on to your friends. They, in turn, send it on to their friends. More eyes see it. The cycle continues until that message spans the globe. And your name is on there, providing it wasn't erased along the way. How special.

I remember when my love affair with e-mail first started. I was lucky to go to a pretty technologically advanced high school, so I had an account as a sophomore. I wrote my first message to my friend sitting next to me.

"Hi."

He typed back: "Hi. How are you?"

I was hooked, but soon we discovered e-mail's true power — dirty forwards, President Clinton jokes and mailing lists.

The holy trinity of e-mail. Now there are those out there who would say I have a problem. They might even say I am addicted to e-mail. They might go so far as to call me an e-mail junkie. These critics of e-mail are most likely the Philistines who don't check their mail but maybe once a week. These are the people who say the ease and quickness with which one can send messages to others makes communication in some ways less special. By using e-mail, our actual conversation gets a little less meaningful. We e-mail junkies should spend some of our obviously abundant free time in writing a letter, an all-but-dead art form.

To them, a letter is something beautiful and special, a throwback to simpler times. The non-believers say the feeling a person gets when receiving a letter from someone special will never be the same as the feeling one gets when one hears the phrase, "You've got mail."

Oh, these poor technology haters. They don't know the world of joy they are missing. Now, first off, who has the time to write an actual letter? The ancient practice of physical writing with actual paper and pen should be left where it belongs — for notes in a large lecture class. I mean, honestly, who's actually written a letter to someone they knew since your third-grade pen pal? Come on, now. Thank-you notes from Christmas don't count.

Now there probably are those people out there who actually do still send letters to loved ones. If that is what's for you, living in the technological dark ages, go for it. If you actually are able to crank out a whole letter, then you have to go through the process of mailing it. I don't know about you, but those goons at the post office have gone too far this time. Another price hike for the stamps means I have to go out and buy more of those stupid one-cent stamps so I can use up all my old stamps. Talk about hassle. It's enough to make somebody want to grab an assault weapon and give some of those letter carriers a taste of their own medicine. Give me a simple and free 'reply-to-author' every time.

If these crazy people are right and I do have some sort of problem (hold on, ooh a new forward, that's 69 times) I don't blame myself. It obviously must be society's fault. E-mail is everywhere. On the first day of class, every teacher's syllabus had their office hours, phone number and e-mail address. On the bottom of my column, you will notice there is my name, major and my e-mail address to get in touch with me. There was even that movie, "You've Got Mail," about an e-mail love affair. So I must be just a product of society. I am not alone; U.S. computers handled four trillion messages last year, compared to the 107 billion pieces of first-class mail sent by the U.S. Postal Service.

Long-distance couples have figured this out. The '90s long-distance couple doesn't need to write those love letters. No more perfume sprayed on the letter or lipstick on the envelope. Who needs that when you've got cool little smiley faces you can put on your letters? Let's not even go into how much money you can save on phone bills.

Now, I am sure that there are others out there like me. You know who you are. If you think maybe you check your e-mail at an obsessive rate (I am up to 74), we can get together and form some sort of support group. Together, we could help silence the critics and prove that we don't have a problem. Just having a friend helps. Drop me a line at my e-mail address. Come on — you know I will be checking it.

Gregory shows lack of respect, integrity

Editor,

This is an open letter to Dick Gregory.

Sir, I hope you will take the time to read this.

I am from Manhattan. I work at K-State as a custodial supervisor. I did not attend your speech on Thursday. However, I did read the press coverage. I know things can be blown out of proportion.

Yes, you have a right to be outspoken, and I do understand where you are coming from, but I take issue with you on a couple of things.

The first is the football team supposedly indicating it was the Lynch Mob. That was inappropriate, as was your use of vulgarity in front of small children. Shouldn't you be setting the example?

The second is that you said you have more integrity in your big toe than K-State. Aren't you stereotyping an entire institution for the acts or deeds of a few? Again, if you had been setting the example, maybe this wouldn't have happened.

As you should know, young people mean well sometimes but go about handling situations in an immature way. There are many of us here who do care about the present and future way of life for everyone. Yes, the truths need to be addressed, but in a mature, adult way.

I think you owe K-State an apology for your vulgarity, on behalf of the small children in attendance as well as for your big toe comparison.

Don't be the opposite of what you are preaching.

Thank you for taking the time to read this. I did not write this letter for K-State. I wrote it because I care.

CATS DOMINATE

Team's balanced attack could prove crucial to women's conference success

The solid shooting of the K-State women's basketball team's guards in their first six Big 12 Conference games paid off again Saturday in the Cats' 79-67 victory over Missouri-but not in the way many would think.

Thanks to the increased effort that the Mizzou defense placed on stopping K-State's outside gunners, four of the Cats' post players finished in double figures and dominated the outsized Tigers inside the paint.

This combination of inside-outside production led to a more efficient offensive attack, Coach Deb Patterson said.

"I thought we were doing an effective job on the offensive end of the floor of maximizing our possessions," Patterson said.

The point production down low isn't something new for K-State. Forward Nicky Ramage's Big 12 Player of the Week award exemplified her steady play in the post.

But the Cats' group success inside took pressure off the team's backcourt players and provided a well-rounded plan of attack that was absent from most of the team's 4-3 start in the conference.

No one personified the breakthrough better than center Angie Finkes, who shook off a slow start in the Big 12 by adding 18 points in the Cats' victory. Patterson said Finkes' return to form was due to a renewed sense of confidence.

"I think she is beginning to get in a rhythm and she is feeling more comfortable with the ball," Patterson said. "What we saw tonight is the Angie Finkes we have seen in the past."

While Finkes' play was reminiscent of the past, center Olga Firsova showed signs of the future by coming off the bench and collecting 13 points, eight rebounds and four blocked shots. Thorough on both ends of the court, Firsova's defensive intensity helped seal the victory, Patterson said.

"Her blocked shots were a game-changing presence," Patterson said. "It really inspired the team to come up with more on the offensive end. It helps to intimidate the opponent's offense."

Firsova has been steadily improving offensively during the season but until Saturday, had lacked the killer instinct needed to dominate in the post. Forward Brandy Harris said Firsova's new desire could change an opponent's offensive game plan.

"If I were a post player, I would be kind of scared because she can change my shot," Harris said. "She's a big girl when she's in there and she's gonna get the rebounds if she really wants them."

With a heightened level of intensity in the post, the Cats' hopes of a second-half surge through the Big 12 schedule looks promising. And while inside scoring and rebounding are important keys to unlocking this desire, Patterson said, sometimes it's the little things that seal a win.

"Shot-blocking is one of those things in a game that really electrifies a team and certainly a crowd," she said. "That was big, and it helps intimidate the offense as well."

Olympic president attacks opponents, calls attention to his simple lifestyle

By STEPHEN WILSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — International Olympic Committee President Juan Antonio Samaranch went on the attack Monday, angrily firing back at his critics, praising his record and dismissing renewed calls for his resignation.

"I am pleased with myself, what I have done these 18 years," Samaranch said. "Today, the International Olympic Committee is very important in our society."

A day after expelling six members in the biggest corruption scandal in Olympic history, Samaranch took the offensive, giving a series of interviews to show he is still in charge.

He said his lifestyle, often described as a series of first-class travel and posh hotel suites, was much simpler.

"I am not a rich man," he said. "I am a normal man."

Newspapers around the world continued to criticize the IOC and called on Samaranch to step down in the wake of the bribery scandal that has engulfed the Salt Lake City Winter Games of 2002. "It is brazen of Samaranch to stay put. It means that a nasty odor still clings to the IOC," said a front-page editorial in the Dutch newspaper, Trouw.

The 78-year-old Spaniard remained defiant and said the IOC needs him more than ever because the organization is going through the worst crisis in its 105-year existence.

"I am not thinking of any kind of resignation," he said. "In these moments, the Olympic movement is in real danger. ... I have been elected by the members of the IOC, not by outside people. Not a single call is coming from an IOC member."

Samaranch announced Sunday he would put his leadership to a vote of confidence at a special IOC session March 17 and 18. Only if he fails to get the members' endorsement will he resign, Samaranch said. At the moment, the chances of him losing the vote are remote.

He took direct aim at Robert Helmick, a former IOC vice president and head of the U.S. Olympic Committee. Helmick, who resigned from both organizations in 1991 following conflict-of-interest allegations, has led a vocal campaign for Samaranch's ouster.

In an unusual public attack on another person, a visibly angry Samaranch said Helmick has no business calling for his resignation. He said Helmick left the IOC because he would have been expelled otherwise.

"If these propositions are coming from Helmick, for me, they have not any kind of value," Samaranch said. "He was a man who had to resign because he was facing expulsion from the IOC."

In Des Moines, Iowa, Helmick said Samaranch's actions Sunday were a good first step but far from enough to solve the problems facing the IOC.

"For his own sake, I hope he will carefully consider all actions possible for the IOC to cleanse itself of this mess and how new leadership might help," Helmick said.

Samaranch said Sunday he would put his leadership to a vote of confidence at a special IOC session March 17 and 18. Only if he fails to get the members' endorsement will he resign, Samaranch said. At the moment, the chances of his losing the vote are remote.

Elected in 1980, Samaranch has said he intends to retire when he completes his final term in 2001, when he will be 81. He ruled out being drafted for another term.

Samaranch confirmed that the six IOC members who were "temporarily excluded" Sunday effectively had been expelled. If they fight their ouster, he said, they will need to seek reinstatement at the March session, a reversal "I cannot imagine."

"The proposition to expel the members is very clear," he said. "All the documents will be in the hands of the members of the IOC."

Samaranch was referring to the IOC investigative report showing that 14 members received cash payments, scholarships, medical services and other favors stemming from Salt Lake City's winning bid for the games.

Three members have resigned in the case. In addition to the six expelled, one received a warning and three others — including executive board member Kim Un-Yong of South Korea — remain under investigation.

Under Samaranch, the Olympics have moved from near-bankruptcy to billion-dollar success. IOC director general Francois Carrard acknowledged that the Olympic bidding process became rife for abuses once the games became a big-money attraction.

"The flaws have begun because you meet people who are eager to do anything, to seduce, to influence people," he said. "At first, it's not all necessarily by corruption. But you want to convince, you want to be kind, you want to be nice, you want to influence, you want to seduce."

Cats run dry in Arizona

■ K-State manages two wins against weekend competition

By SETH TROTTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State tennis team started the season with three losses against strong teams. The Wildcats managed only two victories in matches during the weekend in Tucson, Ariz.

The Cats were defeated 7-2 by Arizona, 9-0 by Mississippi and 9-0 by San Diego.

On Friday against Arizona, sophomore Martina Popisilova and freshman Kathy Chuda picked up the Cats' only victories. Popisilova, playing in the No. 1 position, defeated Monique Allegre 6-3, 7-5, 6-3. Chuda defeated Vanessa Abel 7-6, 6-0, 6-4.

Head Coach Steve Bietau was pleased with the effort on Friday and Saturday against Arizona and Mississippi.

"I felt we started out on a strong note," he said. "I thought we really played well in spots where we didn't win."

Bietau said the team played pretty well against sixth-ranked Mississippi, which won every match 9-0.

"On the positive side, we had a couple of matches last two hours with Mississippi and ended up losing the match," he said.

However, on Sunday against San Diego, Bietau was disappointed with how the team played. "I was not at all happy with the match versus San Diego. I had hoped as we went through the weekend that our performance would improve over two days," he said. "This was actually our worst performance out of the three."

Bietau was pleased with the individual play of Popisilova.

"I thought Martina played pretty well," he said. "Against Arizona, she was able to make some adjustments in the game that allowed her to win that match."

Popisilova had to play the No. 1 and No. 3-ranked players in her last two matches.

"She stayed in the matches. She tried different things. She played hard, but it just wasn't enough," Bietau said.

Bietau felt the doubles teams could have performed better during the tournament.

"It is clear that all of our players have skills that they need to develop to play better doubles," he said. "The chemistry between the doubles' teams is crucial. I didn't leave this weekend feeling like we had anything strong going."

Bietau wants the team to get stronger mentally. "It looked to me like from a mental and emotional side of it, things just went flat this weekend," he said.

The Wildcats, 0-3, travel to Oklahoma this weekend. They have dual matches scheduled against Notre Dame and Tulsa.

"IT LOOKED TO ME LIKE FROM A MENTAL AND EMOTIONAL SIDE OF IT, THINGS JUST WENT FLAT THIS WEEKEND."

Superbowl Sunday chance for males to relive high school gridiron glory

VIEWPOINT

CRANE

Football fans across the nation and the world are counting the days to Sunday as the NFL's championship game, the Super Bowl, creates one last moment of glory for all those should have and could have camped out on the couch.

This is it for football action, and I didn't think of it that way until I took in "Varsity Blues" over the weekend. Granted, high school football, which is the premise of the movie, is long over for the season. But as some women wouldn't understand, football is just a guy thing. Football is an outlet for our anger and a chance to get some pride and respect. Like a bad Bruce Springsteen song, it is our chance to live glory days.

"Varsity Blues" depicts the glory days well. The football scenes are a bit overdone. Well, let's be honest, everything's a bit overdone, but hey, it's Hollywood. We pay to see overdone. The thing it does portray are some of the emotions involved, from the highs and lows of winning and losing to the sorrow of an injured player, even the parents' and coach's point of view. The emotions packaged with football, school, the high school age and everything in between are what I believe etch an emotional graveyard of football memories in a man's head forever.

The feeling of scoring your first touchdown cannot be described. Winning the big game with the help of all your friends is incredible. You feel like you've accomplished something, like you've waged a war and won.

In football, you make unforgettable memories, and images stay locked in your memory forever. I had a football coach who was emotionally unstable. His love for the game made him spit and stutter while he talked, showering you with criticism and compliments, which somehow pumped you up. He mixed up plays and compared us to players from the 1970s. Sometimes he would even send in plays from his past that we had never heard of. That made things interesting.

In doing all this he might have looked like a drooling fool, but his love for the game was genuine. The tears welling up in his eyes while he was telling us how proud he was of our wins proved that.

I'll never forget his spittle-filled pregame pep talk in which we were showered with saliva and said, "Gentlemen, there's going to be a war right over there on that field tomorrow night. And you're going to be knee deep in it. It's horseshoes and hand grenades! You boys should be spit and fire and aargh!" That's about when his tears started flowing. By the time we were seniors, we were used to it.

I guess the point is that men have an emotional connection with few things in this world. One of them happens to be football. When Super Bowl XXXIII begins Sunday, millions of men will be watching as their final excuse and chance at glory this season ticks down to zero.

The two teams involved are the Denver Broncos, last year's champs, and the underdog team of nobodies, the "Dirty Birds," the Atlanta Falcons. I personally wanted to see Minnesota make it with its high-scoring offense. I wanted to see if Denver's defense could hold rookie star Randy Moss — no one else has. In the AFC, I'm no Denver supporter because I am a die-hard Kansas City Chiefs fan. That's what I did this season: die. Regardless of the Chiefs, my hate for Denver is self-evident.

This game should be a good one. It has all the makings of a drama. Stay with me here. Broncos coach Mike Shanahan, once an assistant at Denver under present Atlanta coach Dan Reeves, was fired by Reeves for getting between Reeves and John Elway. He was fired for insubordination. You can catch them slinging words on ESPN almost nightly.

The game itself is looking to be more of a Elway show than anything, but I don't think the Broncos should practice their post-game victory speeches just yet. Atlanta has a quality running back in Jamal Anderson, a streaky quarterback and an often underestimated defense. Denver's only glaring weakness is in the underbelly of its secondary. Denver silenced a lot of critics with its last two wins, but I think it is in for a challenge. It is favored by 7 points, and rightly so.

I gotta go with this. The Dirty Birds will fly on Sunday — they are hot, and they have something to play for. The jitters will be reduced as this coaching drama will take the limelight off some of the stars, and the "no-names" will also have no pressure.

If I'm wrong, fine. I just don't want Elway to win; he should have followed the trend and gone out a winner, because I think when he looks up at the scoreboard Sunday, it's possible he could get an eyeful of what the Dirty Birds can ... doo.

WE MUST MAINTAIN A SENSE OF URGENCY. SPEED IS THE KEY. WE MUST BE FASTER THAN THE COMPETITION.

DOES THAT MEAN YOU'LL SIGN THE STUFF THAT'S BEEN ON YOUR DESK FOR A MONTH?

LOGICAL QUESTIONS DON'T MIX WITH MOTIVATIONAL MESSAGES.

David Seay, Manhattan resident, plays folk and bluegrass songs Sunday night at Espresso Royale Caffé as the first performer in the new Sunday Music Series.

Viewed through a window, patrons of Espresso Royale Caffé listen to Manhattan resident David Seay perform bluegrass, folk and rhythm and blues Sunday night. Seay was the first performer in a new series at Espresso called the Sunday Music Series.

Live music breaks Sunday evening monotony

Live music isn't just for Aggieville bars anymore. Now, a coffeehouse is getting a piece of the action.

Espresso Royale Caffé, an Aggieville coffeehouse, has begun a weekly program, Sunday Music Series, in which live musicians perform every Sunday at 8 p.m.

Sarah Douglass, manager of Espresso Royale, said these music acts were brought in as an alternative to the usual mundane Sunday evenings that many K-State students tend to experience.

"I thought it would be nice to have a more intimate setting in which students may see musicians, as opposed to a bar," Douglass said. "It's a nice way to wind down before the week starts."

The booked acts consist mainly of solo or duo instrumentalists, such as saxophonists or guitarists, but that's not all Espresso Royale will offer. The schedule also includes a string quartet.

Jamie Leonard, senior in public relations and employee at Espresso Royale, said she is excited about the idea of bringing live music back.

"When I was a customer, they had live music, and it was popular," Leonard said. "Now, people seem to be pretty excited about having it again. Hopefully, it'll bring in more students and make Sunday evenings more exciting."

Douglass said she agreed the new music would add a relaxing atmosphere.

Manhattan resident David Seay kicked off the Sunday Music Series. Seay played bluegrass, folk songs such as Bob Dylan's "Blowin' in the Wind," and, of course, rhythm and blues on his harmonica.

"Everyone expects the blues when you play the harmonica," he said.

Seay was signed up to perform by his daughter, Aliah Seay, freshman in political science and theater and an Espresso Royale employee.

"She likes to see me do stuff like this," he said. "When she signed me up, I thought it would be fun."

Seay said he plays the harmonica as more of a hobby, and that he only occasionally performs in small settings, such as Espresso Royale.

Seay said, however, that when he does perform in these settings, he always finds it to be a rewarding experience.

"This isn't something I do a lot," he said. "It's kind of an interesting situation and is a new thing for me."

As of now, Douglass said, a total of five acts are lined up, but there are still some gaps that need to be filled. Douglass said there are postings on the job board in the K-State Student Union and in McCain Auditorium.

For additional information on performing or getting a schedule for Espresso Royale's Sunday Music Series, call 537-2345.

Pomeroy throws caution to wind, follows dreams

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

Pomeroy, winner of the 12th-annual Opus Band Competition, will perform at 10 tonight at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, along with Blister, a Denver-based band.

After that, the band's members said they don't even know what comes next.

An Aggieville favorite since its formation in March 1998, Pomeroy has opted to leave the Manhattan local music scene for a larger, better-paying venue after graduation in May.

Vocalist David Fairbanks, senior in electronic journalism, said the group is considering California and Texas. A road trip over spring break will lead to a decision.

"We realize if we want to accomplish the goal we set for our lives—to play music for a living—we're going to have to move out of state," he said.

Pomeroy members said they hope the release of the band's debut album next month will give them the boost they need in a new city. Although there is some fear of the unknown, Fairbanks said the group is ready for new opportunities.

"We found out too late what makes us happy," Fairbanks said. "We're going to follow the dream, throw caution to the wind and forget why we came to college for a while."

The band is waiting to see how its first bid for the big time pans out. In November, Pomeroy entered a music contest sponsored by Conan O'Brien, host of a late-night talk show. Hundreds of small-time acts around the country mailed five-minute video tapes of their performances to the show in hopes of winning the grand prize: the chance to play for O'Brien on national television.

"They've been announcing some of the runners-up every week on the show, and we've been watching," Fairbanks said. "We just wanted our fans to watch for our names."

Friends and fans of Pomeroy unable to make it to tonight's show at Rusty's shouldn't worry. Pomeroy will be around for four months yet, and these months, the band said, should be busy ones. Fairbanks said he is in the process of setting up shows at Tula's Out of Bounds Sports Bar and Grill, KJ's Bar & Dance Club and the Warehouse Opera House.

Opening for Pomeroy tonight is Blister, a self-described hardcore-rap-metal-techno band from Denver. Manhattan residents might have heard the group's current single, "Dilate," on KMKF-FM 101.5 or caught a glimpse of them in last year's "Warped Tour" show in Lawrence.

While Blister is used to the larger crowds the Colorado scene offers, lead vocalist Chris Dellinger said the group is ready for the Rusty's audience.

"We're more used to bigger crowds, around 600 people, but on the road, we usually play to smaller crowds," Dellinger said.

Blister is expected to play quite a few selections from their album, "White Trash Summer," slated for release in

Remy Zero receives praise from top music performers

By JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

In a top-40 market saturated with bands seemingly aiming for one-hit wonder status, it's good to know a band like Remy Zero can crash the party from time to time.

While other bands are searching for their semi-charmed lives, the L.A.-based Remy Zero gets back to the basics by striving for a complete album with its second release, "Villa Elaine" (Geffen).

"Prophecy," the first single from the album, slowly has crept onto the modern rock radio scene and has been praised by the Smashing Pumpkins' Billy Corgan and, for better or worse, Courtney Love.

The album was released in August, but the band's first single wasn't sent to radio stations until early October. Now, the band returns to the road, opening for Semisonic tonight at The Granada Theatre in Lawrence.

Heralded as the Southern Radiohead by many music publications, the Alabama-born quintet live up to the hype by weaving deeply emotive lyrics with guitars bent on exploring areas of sound often overlooked.

The result is an album best served with scenery. Lead singer Cinjun Tate's ranging vocals—eerily similar to that of The Jayhawks' former singer Mark Olsen and rock star Freddie Mercury of Queen—mix with the instrumental ambience to paint tales of depression, redemption and loss.

The songs were recorded in a place all too familiar with the emotional rollercoaster of life. The Villa Elaine, a Hollywood hotel where Remy Zero recorded the album that bears its name, once catered to the elite stars of the silver screen. Now, crumbled walls and run-down facilities house baseheads and transvestites far from Hollywood's dreams.

These elements made the study of broken dreams easier to research, said Tate, who romanticized the decay into powerful ballads.

The album's 11 tracks mirror Radiohead's blend of sound and serve as an ideal soundtrack to anybody, lost soul or not, cruising the late-night highways or the Flint Hills at dusk.

of 5

"Hermes Bird," the first track on "Villa Elaine," comes across like a B-side left off Radiohead's "The Bends." Much like a crazed fan, Remy Zero seems intent on praising their idol.

Outside of "Hermes Bird," other tracks are worthy of air play. "Hollow," an exorcism of a relationship gone bad, changes pace from a glam-rock anthem into an upbeat pop song before a return to the power chords puts the affair to rest.

The overblown obsession with Radiohead aside, Remy Zero's "Villa Elaine" is an album worthy of air-play in a modern rock market filled with monotony.

Students nominated for Goldwater scholarship

By REED DUNN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four K-State students have been selected to compete for this year's Barry Goldwater Scholarship.

To be eligible for the award, students must be studying math, science or engineering and have at least a 3.0 grade-point average.

Brian Keller, junior in microbiology; Sandra Koo, sophomore in microbiology and biochemistry; Matt Crawley, senior in physics; and Peter Pauzauskie, sophomore in chemistry, chemical engineering and math, are the K-State representatives.

Keller has been working with a team on gene-cloning research, along with being a member of Golden Key and Phi Eta Sigma national honor societies.

"I'm looking at going into research as a career and thought this would help with my application process to medical school," Keller said.

Koo said her family has a strong science background because her father is a K-State professor and nutritional biochemist. She said she remembered visiting his lab when she was a child.

"At a very young age I remember going to his lab on campus and being interested in things," Koo said.

Her older sister, Sonya, was nominated and won the Goldwater award in 1996. After her sister won, Koo said she noticed how the award changed her sister's life for the better.

"I knew it was going to be hard work, but my sister encouraged me to apply,"

Koo said.

Crawley, Physics Club president, plans to attend K-State another year before pursuing graduate school in a specific area of physics.

"I would like to get the best of both worlds by teaching and studying," he said.

The research of nanoparticles and their property of destructive surface absorption interested Pauzauskie and led him to study with K-State professors, graduate students and other undergraduates.

"I like what we are doing now because it has possibilities for application," Pauzauskie said.

Since 1989, K-State students have won 34 Goldwater scholarships, ranking first among public universities in the nation. Of all colleges and universities nationwide, only Princeton is ranked higher, with 35 winners.

The candidates are four talented students who have shown a commitment to careers in science and engineering, said Beth Powers, arts and sciences academic adviser.

Powers and several K-State professors have helped the nominees revise their applications and essays since the selection process in November.

The revised applications will be judged, and 300 national winners will be announced in March.

"K-State has a wonderful network of professors and employees who have helped," Pauzauskie said. "I am personally thankful for all of the assistance they have given me."

CLINTON

Lewinsky remains at the top of the list, House officials said, and there is continued interest in seeking testimony from Betty Currie, the president's secretary. Additional consideration is being given to adding presidential friend Vernon Jordan to the list or perhaps a White House aide, either chief of staff John Podesta or Sidney Blumenthal.

The officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the idea of trying to question Kathleen Willey had been dropped as had the idea of summoning any of a handful of other, less well-known women who have alleged that Clinton made unwelcome sexual advances. House prosecutors had long sought their testimony to see whether Clinton or associates tried to intimidate them to change their stories.

"We've got to prioritize this and get down to the bare minimum and not run the risk of getting zero witnesses because we put on too many," said Rep. James Rogan, R-Calif., a member of the House team prosecuting the president.

Republican leader Lott claimed enough votes to squash the attempt, and no Democrat disputed him. In fact, one Democrat, Russell Feingold of Wisconsin, sought unsuccessfully during the day to have the effort to dismiss separated into two votes, one for each article of impeachment, thereby leaving open the question of how he might vote.

At the same time, Democrats expressed confidence they could produce enough votes to make it clear that Clinton eventually will be acquitted on the impeachment charges.

It takes a majority vote to dismiss the charges but two-thirds to convict the president.

The bid to open deliberations, led by Democratic Sens. Tom Harkin of Iowa and Paul Wellstone of Minnesota, drew the support of 40 Democrats and three Republicans. Opposed were 52 Republicans and five Democrats.

"The sergeant at arms will please close the doors," Chief Justice William Rehnquist ordered as soon as the roll call had been announced.

Many senators from both parties have begun to call for an end to the trial, which has consumed virtually all the Senate's time since Jan. 3.

Democratic support for Clinton has hardened over that period, virtually assuring his acquittal when the final vote is called. Some Republican senators are urging an end to the trial, at the same time House Republicans are pressing to extend the proceedings.

"There's a feeling that if the House managers have their way we're never going to get a bipartisan conclusion," Democratic Sen. Richard Durbin of Illinois said before the day's trial session.

Republicans, too, favor bipartisanship but not at any price. "There ought to be a way to have an exit strategy that's honorable," said Alaska Sen. Ted Stevens.

At least one stab at bipartisanship was made during the day, as GOP Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas met with Democratic Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts on a possible agreement. No deal was struck on what officials said was a GOP suggestion for a limited number of witnesses to be questioned in private on a compressed timetable before a final vote.

The day began with members of both parties meeting separately to weigh a Democratic proposal to bring the trial to an end by Friday with a vote on the articles of impeachment themselves. That would have ended any chance of witnesses.

The idea was "summarily rejected by Lott and the Republican" caucus, said John Czwartacki, a spokesman for the majority leader.

Republicans, seizing on a comment made Saturday by White House lawyer Gregory Craig, dispatched several questions to the White House for the president's "personal response, in writing and under oath."

The questions dealt with issues including Clinton's testimony in his deposition in the Paula Jones lawsuit and before Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr's grand jury.

White House spokesman Joe Lockhart said questions to the president are "not called for in the Senate procedure" and Clinton won't answer them.

that strategy.

It condemned the evils of exploitative capitalism, drug trafficking, corruption and "the culture of death" that kills through abortion, euthanasia and capital punishment.

He also urged Catholics to defend more vigorously their faith against Protestant sects that have made inroads in Latin America.

Part of the millennium strategy involves bringing civic leaders back into contact with the church.

In recent years, the pope said, "pastoral care for the leading sectors of society has been neglected and many people have thus been estranged from the Church," leading to policies "alien to Gospel."

Perhaps most important, the pope renewed his relationship with Mexicans, whom he has adored — and who have adored him — since the first trip of his papacy in 1979.

CATHOLICS

message without having to go see him."

Despite this, Jeremy Heinen, senior in marketing and international business, said he was looking forward to seeing the pope because his message was so important.

"It's very important to me to see someone who is so inspirational," Heinen said. "He's an influence to Catholics all over the world."

In his recent visit to Mexico City, the pope drew about 110,000 spectators.

Although the pope is an important religious figure to Catholics around the globe, his influence over American Catholics sometimes is questioned.

Heinen said the pope should be admired by Americans as well, because he is so unwavering in his beliefs.

"He doesn't say, 'well, that's all right' and change his mind about things," Heinen said. "He says, 'this is what we believe in, period' and that really inspires me."

Kantack, on the other hand, said he thought the most inspirational part about the pope is the way he has lived his life.

"His life, everything he does, it's all been devoted to glorifying God," Kantack said.

"That's his message. So, I guess, yes, I believe his message," he said.

Field of dreams left unfinished

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Baseball practice started this week, and Frank Myers Field is not ready.

Renovations, including a spectator grandstand, player locker rooms, a concession stand and restrooms for players and spectators, started last year, but construction is not complete. Myers Field previously had none of these facilities.

K-State Athletics Director Max Urlick said the expansion of the field is supposed to take seven months, but it won't start until the rest of construction begins and the design is completed.

In order for the baseball team to play on the field, Urlick said, the sod needs to be ready.

"That is a big concern now," Urlick said. "We're trying to move as quickly as possible."

Art Campbell, owner of Campbell Sod, said the sod was installed on the field in December, but it won't be ready for play or practice until May.

Because it is the dormant season, it will take a couple of months for the sod to become rooted and for grass to start growing, Campbell said.

"It takes some time to get established," he said.

Urlick said the sod was put down late because of bad weather conditions.

As soon as the field is ready to be played on, the team can use it regardless of the fact that many other facets of the project, such as concession stands, might not be finished, Urlick said.

Until then, Urlick said he and others are looking for alternate sites for practice and games.

Assistant Athletics Director Dave Cox said they have found alternate sites, but they have not been confirmed in writing.

"We anticipate we will be using the Eisenhower Field in Manhattan for some games," he said. "We have feelers out for the professional stadium in Wichita, and we've talked with the facilities in Hutchinson; Salina; St. Joseph, Missouri and Kansas City."

URICK

Cox said the team will split practices between Eisenhower Field and CiCo Park. He said it's now practicing primarily at Brandeberry Indoor Complex.

Baseball head coach Mike Clark said practicing and playing at different facilities will be tough.

"We're going to have to stay positive and continue to work hard and try to get better at each facility we practice at," he said. "We'll just have to make the adjustment once we get to where we're going to practice and where we're going to play."

Clark said not having a home-field advantage will be another obstacle the team will face.

"It's not the ideal situation," he said. "It's not something we want to do, but it is something we have to do in order to get the stadium we want."

The original proposal for revamping

Myers Field was an $800,000 project. Now, the expansion is projected to cost $2.7 million after everything is completed, but the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics doesn't have all the money it needs to cover the cost.

"We're still finishing our fund raising. That's not complete yet," Urlick said.

Cox said he anticipated additional costs to the project from travel and other expenses due to having to use other facilities to practice and play on.

Urlick said that if there is enough money there are some other things they would like to do. These are things that aren't essential, but would make the stadium more complete.

When the stadium finally is complete, Clark said the wait will have been worth it.

"There will be times this year we will be tested," he said. "We'll just have to be an extremely focused ball club and an extremely confident ball club in order to make this work. But, if we can make it work, it will be the story of college baseball in 1999."

Piles of old signs litter Frank Myers Field Tuesday afternoon. The renovations to the field include a spectator grandstand, player locker rooms, a concession stand and restrooms for players and spectators.

Pope condemns U.S. practices

By JULIA LIEBLICH
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. LOUIS — Pope John Paul II paid a visit Tuesday to America's heartland, where he decried teen suicide and despair and likened the legal battle over abortion and euthanasia to the clash over slavery on the eve of the Civil War.

"There is something terribly wrong when so many people are overcome by hopelessness to the point of taking their own lives," the pope said at a youth rally at the Kiel Center, where his somber message stood in stark contrast to the rock-star welcome he got from the jubilant crowd of 20,000.

"Remember — Christ is calling you, the Church needs you, the Pope believes in you and he expects great things of you," he said.

John Paul, making his fifth trip to the U.S. mainland, arrived in St. Louis for a 30-hour stay after a triumphant, five-day visit to Mexico City. President Clinton and the first lady joined 500 families at a sweltering National Guard hangar at Lambert Airport to welcome the pope.

The pontiff later met privately with the president. "For 20 years you have challenged us to think of life not in terms of what we acquire for ourselves but what we give of ourselves," the president told John Paul at the airport ceremony. "We honor you for standing for human dignity and human rights."

The 78-year-old pope's arm shook as he held the lectern, his body stooped over his text. Still, his voice was firm.

He reminded Americans of the Dred Scott case, tried in St. Louis. Scott, a slave bought in 1833 by an Army surgeon stationed near St. Louis, sued for his freedom. Living in a free state, he said, made him a free man.

In 1857, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled, in effect, that slaves were property and not citizens — a decision, the pope said, that declared "an entire class of human beings — people of African descent — outside the boundaries of the national community and the Constitution's protection."

"Today," the pope said, "the conflict is between a culture that affirms, cherishes and celebrates the gift of life, and a culture that

Slaughter capacity damages hog prices

By JENNI LATZKE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The combination of record numbers of market-ready live hogs and a decrease in the slaughter capacity of U.S. processing plants has created a crisis that has left hog producers across the nation devastated.

Jim Nelssen, swine extension specialist, said the situation isn't a matter of decreased demand in pork. The domestic demand has increased 7.1 percent from last year, and the market for U.S. pork on the international market is expanding. The problem is a bottleneck of live hogs waiting for slaughter.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture estimates how many live hogs there will be in a year. Processing plants base their decisions on these figures. Because the USDA underestimated the number of live hogs, plants across the country downsized their slaughter capacities.

According to a report from the Extension Service, nearly 2 million hogs have been slaughtered each week since September. The daily slaughter capacity of U.S. packing plants is roughly 383,000 head.

This resulted in plummeting prices. "We went through a period of wanting to know how long this would last," Nelssen said. "It was a shock to everyone when the price hit at $10 per hundredweight. The good news is, market prices are increasing rapidly and have already increased 200 percent."

Even with the slight rebound in prices, producers are still in trouble. According to the USDA Economic Research Service, the average share that producers get of retail pork prices went from 37 percent to 12 percent, which means out of the average $2.27-per-pound consumers pay for pork, producers see only 27 cents per pound.

With such harsh market conditions, many producers have been forced to sell their pigs rather than spend money on feed. Nelssen said the full effect of the crisis will not hit farmers until they begin to prepare their taxes and realize what they lost. He said they might borrow more equity and keep on producing, while others might get out of the industry.

"For those just coming in to the industry, it might finish them," he

Local elementary students tour museum, learn history

Local fourth-grade students said they are happy to be living in the 20th century after their visit to the Wolf House Museum on Tuesday.

The classes, ranging from 24 to 49 students from five local elementary schools, visited Wolf House in honor of Kansas Day, Jan. 29. The trip corresponds with the children's study of Kansas Day.

Riley County Historical Museum Registrar Linda Glasscow helped organize the event with Curator Edna Williams. The classes visited the museum every hour starting at 8:45 a.m.

"The tour is a community service to the people of Manhattan," Glasscow said. "We want people to come and visit the museum. It gives them a feel of what life was like in the 1800s and educates the children."

The children who visited the museum had mixed reactions to the tour.

Most said it was fun and enjoyed looking at all the

Dial-around service rates confusing, might mislead unwary consumers

By JEANNINE AVERSA
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Alexander Korogodsky of Scotch Plains, N.J., saw an ad promising deeply discounted long-distance rates if he dialed a string of numbers before making a call. Instead, he was billed $2.35 for a one-minute call from his home to New York.

The total bill for three months of calls came to $720.12.

"My wife said, 'Did they forget to put a period in the right place?'" Korogodsky said.

Korogodsky wasn't charged the low rate promised by "dial-around" service 10-321, now 10-10-321, operated by Telecom USA, a subsidiary of MCI WorldCom. Instead, a technical glitch caused his dial-around call to be billed at MCI's highest rate.

Though the problem, which also affected many others, was a fluke, Korogodsky's experience illustrates the confusion some people endure when they turn to dial-around services to save money. Korogodsky spent days trying to reach Telecom USA to fix the charges, which he paid in full. He's still waiting for MCI to reimburse him.

Facing a growing number of complaints, the Federal Communications Commission is looking into how such dial-around services are advertised and whether consumers get enough information about rates, restrictions and where to call with a billing problem.

"Consumers should not get the runaround on dial-around," FCC chairman Bill Kennard said.

The agency is checking into three areas, according to officials who spoke on condition of anonymity:

■ Whether consumers realize that some

UPC to offer comedy shows for free in Union Station

Union Program Council's Eclectic Entertainment Committee is sponsoring two free comedy nights in Union Station this semester.

Heide McBride, UPC program adviser, said UPC has invited comedians to K-State in the past.

"This event has been going on for many years, but we're now trying to promote it as a free comedy night," McBride said. "That's a little different from past years."

Attendance at past events has been good, McBride said.

"We've been pleased with the turnout, but we could always improve," she said.

Comedians are chosen by the committee through different methods, said Alex Stucky, senior in statistics and Eclectic Committee chairman.

"Every year, executive members of UPC attend a conference which showcases bands and comedians," Stucky said. "Agencies also send us tapes of comedians, which the committee views and decides on."

Joel Zimmer will perform Feb. 4, and Kivi Rogers will perform April 6.

The committee sponsors the event because it wants to provide entertainment for students, Stucky said.

Janet Balk, graduate student in adult education, attended one of last semester's comedy nights.

"I really enjoyed the comedienne," Balk said. "It was nice to attend a fun activity that was free."

Full-page ad helps sheriff nab Topeka's most wanted

TOPEKA — A sheriff's full-page newspaper advertisement offering cash rewards for help in snaring his 50 most wanted suspects is paying off better than he expected.

Shawnee County Sheriff Dave Menzley placed the ad inside the front section of Sunday's Topeka Capital-Journal, listing the 50 suspects, descriptions, aliases and the charges against them.

Within one day, deputies had arrested 16 of the top 50. Three others had been picked up before the advertisement ran. The newly arrested suspects account for 50 felony charges, ranging from assault with a deadly weapon to involuntary manslaughter.

Of the 19 suspects, 17 were processed through Shawnee County Jail by Monday evening, and two were in custody elsewhere.

Maj. Ken Pierce of the sheriff's department got the idea for the advertisement from Denver police, who publish their 50 most-wanted list once a year. There, police have been able to arrest around 60 percent of the advertised suspects.

Tax legislation would fund grain storage improvements

TOPEKA — Legislation pushed by Gov. Bill Graves to provide sales tax exemptions to help keep grain off the ground was considered Tuesday by a House committee, which was urged to expand the proposal.

The sales tax exemption would be on the cost of labor and materials to upgrade commercial grain elevators and to improve the infrastructure of short line railroads, which transport crops.

Several witnesses urged the House Taxation Committee to make the exemption retroactive to July 1997. They also wanted the exemption to apply to equipment costs and to include improvements to rail sidings at elevators.

"It's a wish list that would make Santa Claus blush," said Chairman David Adkins, R-Leawood. "I respect them for asking, but I doubt we will be able to grant all their wishes, although some of their concerns could be met."

The governor's proposal would cost the state about $787 million in lost revenue in fiscal year 2000. With the additional requests, it would cost the state about $2.6 million.

"We believe there is an immediate need for growth within the Kansas grain storage industry due primarily to the growing level of grain stocks on hand," said Doug Wareham of the Kansas Grain and Feed Association.

Florida clergy charged with theft from rebuilding fund

LARGO, Fla. — As the Rev. Henry Lyons accepted a $225,000 check to rebuild burned black churches, he told the Anti-Defamation League the money would go immediately to "the wheels that are squeaking the loudest."

"We believed all the money had been expeditiously distributed to the churches in need of rebuilding," Mark Medin, director of national leadership of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, told jurors at Lyons' trial today.

Lyons, president of the National Baptist Convention USA, is charged with racketeering and grand theft, accused of swindling money from corporations and stealing funds from the ADL intended to rebuild black churches.

Lyons accepted the money at the ADL's annual meeting in 1996, when a cluster of church arson fires, many of them involving predominantly black churches in the South, was making headlines. Jurors today saw a videotape of the ceremony.

"We immediately determined where these funds should go, and the wheels that are squeaking the loudest at this point in time, we will give the funds to those churches," Lyons said on the tape.

Medin said Lyons followed up two weeks later with a letter saying six burned churches had received $35,000 each and there were more churches still in need. The ADL then forwarded him another check for $19,500, Medin said.

Lyons is charged with grand theft in the handling of the ADL funds.

Arkansas legislation would allow firearms in church

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Holy heat. There could be a gun under that choir robe or churchgoer's jacket.

A legislator has introduced a bill to let people with concealed-gun permits bear their arms in church.

Constituents want the privilege because sometimes they must go straight from work to weeknight church services and can't get home to drop off their guns, state Rep. Stephen Simon said.

He introduced a bill Monday to relax the state's concealed-weapons ban in houses of worship, as well as in parks, sports events and bars. Guns still would be barred from schools, state offices, courthouses and airports.

Ministers and church officers in Kentucky may carry guns inside church, under a provision enacted last year.

Eight states besides Arkansas prohibit people with concealed-weapons permits from carrying guns in church.

Students, professors return to elementary school

By JESSICA THOMAS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A few K-State students were back in grade school Tuesday night, but this time they were the teachers.

Science and Technology Night, featuring several K-State science departments, was sponsored by the Lee Elementary School Parent Teacher Organization.

"The purpose is to expose the children to different disciplines of science and to make it fun and exciting for them," said Rosemary Romundo, PTO member and co-organizer.

There were four groups from K-State representing the departments of Physics, Psychology and Food Science and Industry, as well as a student group, the Wildlife Society. A representative from Sunset Zoological Park showed animals. Each group gave 15-minute presentations that were interactive and geared toward the students.

"We hope to get each child exposed to the different kinds of science and to take the fear out of it," Romundo said. "The idea is to make science less intimidating."

This is the second year the Science and Technology Night was offered, and organizers said they want to make it an annual event. The presenters came on a volunteer basis after they were invited by the PTO.

"We pretty much left the content up to the presenters," Romundo said. "The bulk of the work was on their part."

Students from kindergarten through sixth grade moved to different rooms to watch each presentation.

"The K-State students seem to come to life with the kids, and I think the kids pick up on that. If there is interest there by the presenters, then they can share the enthusiasm," said Caprice Edwards, PTO member and co-organizer.

Edwards said she was happy with the attendance, which was an increase from last year.

"There were more people than we had anticipated. Last year, we had about one hundred, and this year we had double that."

There was a really good parent representation, and all grade levels were represented," Edwards said.

Daniel Liestman attended with his son, B.J.

"I think that science is important, and this was a good opportunity to light a spark."

My son wants to be an astronaut and the first person on Mars, so he needs a good ground for that," Liestman said.

B.J. Liestman said he was more impressed by the Sunset Zoo presentation.

"My favorite part was the animals, especially the hedgehog. He was a cute little dude," the 11-year-old said.

The food science and industry department allowed the children to try mini-experiments and use microscopes.

"We have a food-science club, and this is one of the things that they decided to do," said Tom Herald, associate professor of animal sciences and industry.

"I am a big advocate of showing how people can use food to teach science."

These are items people use everyday, like vinegar and baking soda. Kids use science words like hydrochloric acid, and that doesn't have any relevance to their lives."

Tammy Munsch, sophomore in food science and industry, helped the children use red cabbage as a pH indicator.

"It's a really good thing for the kids, and it's fun for us too," Munsch said.

"I enjoy helping the kids and showing them that food and chemistry can go together."

Chad Willemssen, senior in fisheries and wildlife biology, is the president of the K-State student chapter of the Wildlife Society, which used a tag game to demonstrate the relationship between prey and predator.

"The Wildlife Society is a national organization that is a way for the student chapter members to interact with professionals," Willemssen said.

"We also help with classes offered by Wildlife and Parks that involves students from kindergarten to 12th grade, and we teach them about land ethic and about predator and prey, like the game that we demonstrated tonight."

Schaneé Anderson, curator of education at Sunset Zoo, brought several animals students would not normally see at the zoo, since the animals travel around the state to similar events.

She said it was a good opportunity to teach people about animals.

Dean Zollman, professor in physics, said it important to show children the importance of science in their daily lives.

"It is really enjoyable to interact with the kids because they have some good ideas," Zollman said.

"I want to show them that science has a relationship to things in their lives and when they stop to think, they can figure out why things work."

West-side plan on hold until board meeting

By CRISTINA JANNEY
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Area retailers are waiting to see what happens at a Monday planning board meeting with a proposed Wal-Mart Supercenter at Seth Child and Shuss roads before making any moves on development in west Manhattan.

A new mall for Manhattan's west side is still in the works, but a representative of Matlock-Johnson Realtors of Junction City said the company would not comment on any specifics of the project that was first billed as a strip mall.

Larry Plumlee, Century 21 realtor, had proposed Wal-Mart move its site from Seth Child and Shuss roads to a 162-acre site near Manhattan Regional Airport and just south of the Flint Hills Job Corps Center. Plumlee had proposed a mall that could have also included a Home Depot.

The original Wal-Mart location has met with opposition from area residents who complained the new store would create increased noise, traffic and trash.

Wal-Mart officials said last week the company was sticking with its original location.

Plumlee said he did not blame Wal-Mart because the location would give the store a definite business advantage. Stores like Target or Home Depot would likely not fare well if they were the last businesses as shoppers went out of town, he said.

However, Plumlee said allowing Wal-Mart to develop in west Manhattan would eliminate sites for residential housing.

"There isn't anywhere in town now where you could put in an average $100,000 house," he said.

Programming changes unpopular, necessary

KSDB 91.9 found out the hard way that change never makes everyone happy. When the station changed its format and made specialty programming a lower priority, some K-State students were upset.

But Wildcat 91.9 made the most logical decision that could be made. By creating a format, it created an identity. It became a radio station that was adequate and viable to its listeners, albeit not all of its listeners.

As a broadcaster, Wildcat 91.9 is in a uniquely awkward situation. If students are not pleased with programming, there are no other campus radio stations to turn to. Nor can Wildcat 91.9 create more hours in the day for playing all the music or programs everyone wants to hear.

Much of the campus radio station's content is generated by students who are earning academic credit for their work. It is in a lot of ways a lab environment for future professional broadcasters. It is expected, then, that Wildcat 91.9 would try to emulate professional radio stations by sticking with a format and airing public affairs programming.

Students, who pay a privilege fee for the station, have every right to suggest programming alternatives for the radio station. In fact, program director Jeremy Claeys would probably appreciate the input.

But students also should realize that Wildcat 91.9 is trying to ensure that the most students get their money's worth.

Love's donation sets example for others

The past semesters might have been among the darkest times for Hale Library. Despite a beautiful building, administrators continue to struggle to find adequate funding for books, periodicals and other resources.

It might be Dr. William R. Love who helped start the turnaround.

Love's $1 million gift to the library is the largest donation ever to go to the inside of the library. It is the hope of the K-State community that his donation will lay the groundwork for additional contributions.

His generosity earned him a part of K-State history — he becomes the namesake of the William R. Love Science Library, which is located on the first floor of the building. His name will stay there to remind students not only of the charity he gave but also to encourage students to think of K-State decades from now when they are able to give a substantial amount to their alma mater.

Love's donation will help give students the ability to gain the knowledge they deserve. Love's commitment to education and to this university also should give every student something to strive for.

OUR VIEW, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. OUR VIEW is the Collegian's official opinion.

AMERICAN DREAM LOST

Focus becomes helping ourselves, not others

It is as a matter of living and making individual choices that we, united, come together under one name — Americans. And yet we find ourselves in the midst of a plethora of groups, each offering us some prize if we unite with them.

None more prevalent than government. Last week during the State of the Union Address, the president encouraged the addition of more than 12 agencies, all for good causes. Most bind us to additional regulation and dependency on government.

Despite our losing a grip on personal freedom and taxes, we seem to hang onto promises that offer us something. Give us. Give us. Give us. Like baby pigs squealing for more of mother's milk.

Quite appropriate the official pens used by senators in pledging their unbiased justice for the president's impeachment trial misread, "Untied States."

Somehow we are losing focus on the American dream. Rather than tying ourselves together with devotion to God, family and friends, we are unknowingly becoming attached to ourselves. We are seeking to fulfill our pleasures and our wants at the cost of others.

This non-unifying effect begins when our focus remains on ourselves. We leave home, cutting the apron strings. We depart hoping to find success and adventure. But in the act of cutting the apron strings from home, we are simultaneously putting on another one.

The putting-on of the second apron is necessary for developing individualism and an understanding of who we are as unique people. But while we are enjoying our new freedom, we must remember that the strings to this new apron are presently being tied. We are developing in ourselves a set of beliefs, underlying values and a moral conduct, the consequences of which will remain with us a lifetime and beyond.

The first apron we wore under the family unit when we were children. For some, this apron was wrongfully stained through abusive situations. Sometimes physically, sometimes verbally, sometimes emotionally. Sometimes all three. The children who enter into adulthood without experiencing any severe stain should be grateful.

The exciting thing is that as young adults, we shed the first apron. The challenging aspect comes when we realize we will wear the second one for a lifetime.

If we choose to focus too long on ourselves, its strings will soon begin to choke and strangle us. Our period of self-betterment will bring harm instead of growth. It takes a maturity to recognize the need for binding ourselves to things of value.

The American dream is not for each of us to have all we want. It is for us to give all we are. We will never attain this dream if we seek after our own gain and profit. It is only through self-denial and love for other people we can hope to fulfill this dream.

When we expect nothing for ourselves and everything for those we love, we are more content with the fruit of our actions. But when we seek our own good, we always desire more than what we get.

The soul of the American dream comes when we recognize the importance of choosing to unite ourselves with other people.

Working for the good of others is a difficult task. It has never been easy to put down what you want for someone else's benefit. But then again, following the American dream never has been easy. It takes courage and commitment and stamina. None of which come naturally.

But the mettle built through difficulty will not disappoint us. Instead, the very success we at first sought after will be ours in abundance.

It comes down to two choices. Either to unite as Americans on a solid foundation for the good of others, or to remain tied to yourself. If you choose the latter, your choice is a freedom that leads to chains. If you choose to unite, your choice leads to true freedom.

Gregory sets standard for overcoming adversity

Editor

In Friday's issue of the Collegian, Danica Coto's fine article on the visit of Dick Gregory to the K-State/Manhattan community during Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week focused on the groans as well as the cheers that greeted Gregory's remarks, including his criticism of the K-State football defense squad's use of the nickname Lynch Mob. Gregory always has been controversial, but he brings a hugely important message to his audiences wherever he goes. If you don't agree with him, you cannot deny that he makes you re-evaluate yourself.

Gregory is an angry (and hilariously funny) man. Is he angry that we parents so often create a poor model for our children, and then blame them for following it? Is he angry that we men, some of whom profess to be Christian, abuse our girlfriends and wives and children? Is he angry that some professed Christians spew out hatred, bigotry and misogyny in blatant disregard of the admonishments and loving advice of the New Testament, and that some of us from all religions undertake (another contradiction) holy wars? Is he angry about what we do to ourselves?

You bet he is, because he cares deeply about all of us. We all should be so angry.

This is the third time I have heard Dick Gregory in person. Every time I come away with the same feeling: Never have I heard so much truth, so telling of a revelation of our self-serving hypocrisies and injustices, in so short a time. At a small college in Nebraska where I taught in the '70s, he made the suits furious; they just didn't get it. But he also saved the life of one alcoholic student there whom I had been unable to reach, and probably the lives of a few others of whom I have no personal knowledge. If Gregory's speech keeps one faculty member, administrator, staff person or office-worker from ignoring a student or other member of our community who needs help, or keeps one Manhattan or K-State student from dying during spring break, or causes one parent to go home and hug his or her spouse and kids instead of abusing them, or helps one person to open the door a bit between him or herself and someone who is different for whatever reason, or causes one person to stop injecting toxins into him or herself, the effort and money being spent to bring him here will have been more than worth it.

The difference between Gregory and you and me is that he has recognized openly and fought these things in himself, largely overcome them (including drug addiction), and for decades has had the moral courage and set the ethical example of his convictions to be able to talk about them frankly, at great cost to himself. Few of us can come close to his example and sheer brilliance.

Many historical figures from antiquity, religious and otherwise, have been models for my life, imperfect and often pathetic as it is despite them. In my own lifetime, in addition to members of my family, the example of people like Eleanor Roosevelt, Martin Luther King Jr., Cesar E. Chavez, Mother Teresa and several people in Manhattan and on the K-State campus have helped me shore up the weak links in my pale imitation of them. For decades, Gregory has been one of my true heroes, for he has kept the (true) faith. We need angry people like him in our lives, to inoculate us at regular intervals against the diseases of complacency and indifference. We need the passion of his love for us to remind us that we are somebody, and that we have to stop messing ourselves up just for a cheap thrill.

Should we hang our heads in shame at the use (anytime, anywhere) of the term lynch mob? Yes, we should. But only for a while; guilt and self-pity have never moved mountains. We should then lift our heads, look straight at the true goals of this great community, university, state and nation, and work together to walk into the light.

Super Bowl common thread, uniquely American tradition

The Super Bowl.

It's Sunday. Are you ready? Myself, I don't particularly care one way or the other. Denver is playing somebody (again), John Elway might or might not get another ring and much chili and domestic beer will be consumed while we all find out.

Pretty typical. I have been on all sides of this thing we call the Super Bowl. I have been host to the party, I have attended the parties. One year I managed to hit four Super Bowl parties in one day without ever watching the actual game.

I have been involved with men for whom the Super Bowl was something akin to going to Mecca. I also have dated those who thought Super Bowl Sunday is a good day to go out for a quiet dinner and do some shopping.

However this year is different for me. This year I have the unique privilege of dating a dyed-in-the-wool football fan. A man for whom the world stops every Sunday and most Monday evenings and a few inexcusable days in-between for a game.

The other twist is that this guy, whom we shall call "Ian," is also in the Army.

Now, if you have never witnessed a Super Bowl Sunday military-style you have truly missed something.

The whole operation shuts down for the day, sometimes three.

If soldiers are training in the field they are bussed to an area with a TV screen to watch the big event.

If they are overseas they all gather together to watch it live, at whatever time that may be.

Time that would normally be spent planning maneuvers and routing supplies is devoted to couch placement as it relates to the kitchen and where the table should go to allow for optimum viewing and simultaneous snacking.

Actually, I made up this last bit but I have found graph paper with maps of the living room under the couch. So I know rearranging is being planned.

I always figured Super Bowl Sunday would be the prime day to either commit a wave of car thefts or bomb this country back to the Stone Age. Everybody is in one place and the military is distracted.

The Super Bowl is an interesting common denominator for this country. Everyone else has World Cup soccer; we have the mother of all football games.

Admittedly the game itself is usually not much to watch as football games go, but it is one of the few times when everyone from my grandmother (who was a major Broncos fan) to your Lit professor will sit down to watch the same thing.

People who are not usually football fans will get into it too. Mostly for the commercials, or MTV's Celebrity Death Match Halftime show.

This is also probably one of the only sports events people will watch even though they don't understand the rules.

Baseball is easy. Hit the ball then race it to the base. Don't bet on your own team. Three strikes and you're out.

In soccer the object is to kill the other team's goalie. For all other sports the team that finishes with the most points and players is the winner.

Football is not as clear-cut. I don't know what a first down is and I'm not alone. I think grabbing the face-mask and jersey should be legal; if you have to wear pads then make them work for you.

I was in England last fall, and somehow my brother and I got talked into explaining football to a bunch of twelve-year-old soccer fans. It was a fiasco and I don't think we made America very proud.

Football is weird and complicated and uniquely American. The players suit up like knights riding into battle where they can be fouled for unnecessary roughness.

Millions of dollars are made by betting on the outcomes of games, even though the players aren't supposed to bet.

It is a representation of all our contradictions and foibles rolled into one two-hour block of time that always goes longer.

In short, football defines our national character, such as it is. God bless the NFL for doing what politics can't.

Quake's death toll nears 1,000

By FRANK BAJAK
The Associated Press

ARMENIA, Colombia — The death toll from the worst earthquake to hit Colombia in more than a century neared 1,000 on Tuesday as survivors anxiously awaited relief supplies and prayed for signs of life under the rubble.

Those hopes were dashed repeatedly. Monday's six-magnitude earthquake devastated cities and villages across western Colombia, a vast Andean terrain where much of the world's coffee is grown. The trembler shook buildings as far away as the capital, Bogotá, 140 miles from the epicenter.

Two small aftershocks hit Armenia on Tuesday afternoon, causing little damage but sending panicked residents running into the rubble-littered streets. There have been about 15 aftershocks.

With hundreds of people believed to be still buried beneath the rubble, mayhem reigned Tuesday in the streets of Armenia, a city of 300,000.

Rescue teams had recovered about 650 bodies in the country Tuesday and estimated that at least 2,700 were injured — but warned this was only a partial accounting.

Capt. Ciro Antonio Guiza, Armenia's deputy fire chief, said rescue workers were so strapped that many bodies remained on the streets uncollected. "There are more than 1,000 dead, perhaps more than 2,000 in Armenia alone," he said.

Carlos Giraldo, the senior Colombian Red Cross official coordinating his organization's relief effort, agreed the death count would climb much higher.

Two-thirds of the city's buildings were rendered uninhabitable. People wandered about desperately looking for relatives.

There was no electricity or running water in most of the city, and food was in dangerously short supply. An estimated 180,000 people were left homeless in Armenia alone.

Coffins have become a coveted item. "I've been looking for five coffins for relatives since 8 o'clock this morning and I couldn't find any, so we're going to have to bury them in plastic," said 34-year-old Diego Ruiz, who lost five relatives.

Rescue workers scrambled to evacuate the thousands of injured and to locate survivors. At the city's small airport, ambulances arrived every 15 minutes with more victims, who were airlifted to hospitals in Bogotá, Medellín and Cali.

"There is a danger of epidemics, because we have more than 200 bodies and we have no refrigerated trucks," Giraldo said.

Two members of Colombia's professional soccer club Atlético Quindío — Diego Montenegro and Ruben Biurret, both from Argentina — were found dead. Witnesses said the two were holding onto each other in the ruins of a downtown hotel. Another four players are feared dead.

Authorities say they need help: tents, food, forklifts, backhoes, antibiotics, generators — and body bags.

Colombians, eager to help, formed long lines at blood banks.

The government set up a bank account to receive donations, and by noon more than $125,000 had been deposited. The European Commission promised $1.1 million, Colombian officials said Tuesday.

What was needed, was far more — maybe hundreds of millions of dollars.

"We're going to need a great deal of international aid because the government by itself does not have enough resources," said Piedad Correal Rubiano, the ombudsman of Quindío state, whose capital is Armenia.

Teams of earthquake specialists from the United States, including 64 from Florida's Dade County and Japan, traveled to Colombia to aid the search for survivors. Mexico said Tuesday it would send a 105-man army search team with dogs and power generators.

President Andres Pastrana declared western Colombia a disaster area Tuesday. He canceled plans to visit Munich, Germany, to meet with World Bank officials.

Despite the massive effort, Colombia's rescue operation appeared to be strained beyond its capacity.

Rubiano said inmates had set fire to Armenia's San Bernardo prison, which still was burning Tuesday, and would not allow firefighters in.

Few buildings were left standing in Calarca, a town just south of Armenia. Workers recovered 106 bodies there by midday.

Colombia's endemic poverty made the disaster even worse. Buildings made of decaying cement and cinderblock were no match for the quake.

Only the northern section of Armenia, where the wealthy live, was left largely intact. Here, authorities set up headquarters for the relief effort.

KSDB proposes fee increase to fund manager, student salaries

■ After a format change, Wildcat 91.9 wants to boost 'poorly financed' college radio budget.

By JENNIFER RYAN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An increase of $15,240 in the student privilege fee budget for KSDB-FM 91.9 was proposed Sunday by Todd Simon, director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications to the Student Senate's Privilege Fee Committee.

KSDB, formerly DB92, now Wildcat 91.9, has undergone several changes recently, including a new format.

"We suspect it is one of the most poorly financed college radio stations in the country," Simon said.

The proposed increase would bring the total allocation to the station to $50,466. The journalism school and the College of Arts and Sciences fund 69 percent of the total KSDB budget now. The present student privilege fee pays 26 percent of the share, and private funds supply the remaining 5 percent.

If granted, the increase in privilege fee funds would be applied to the station manager position. The station manager is paid $31,502 with fringe benefits. With an increase in the privilege, the salary would increase to $37,797.

Simon said the current salary is not competitive. According to the request presented to the committee, the goal of increased funding would be to recruit an individual with a master's degree and/or professional experience, as well as teaching experience.

"Restructuring before has been in the station manager's hands," Jeremy Claeys, program director, said. "We actually have a format now, and we are conducting research and finding out what is most popular."

The radio station is non-commercial and underwriting serves as a way to help support the station. Plans are underway to develop an underwriting plan and to hire staff to promote it. The underwriting program has earned $6,976 during the past four years.

The increase in funding also would raise student salaries. The executive positions in the station receive a token salary of about $70 per month or a $40 half-token salary. This would be raised to $80 per month.

The radio station also would hire an office assistant. The Federal Communications Commission requires that a public file be open at all times. Under current conditions, the office is closed when workers go to lunch or have another engagement.

"This has been a student-assisted radio station," Simon said. "Not to fault anyone, funding from Miller and arts and sciences has just built up over the years."

This fee proposal might be sent on to the Senate for approval by the committee, or a student referendum could be requested.

Jeff Meder, privilege fee committee chair, said the committee is generally open to requests that will help make the university more efficient and accountable at the same time.

"Dr. Simon has a very credible plan for managing KSDB, and I think we welcome that," Meder said. "KSDB has many equipment needs as well, which may result in them requesting additional funding in the near future, pending Dr. Simon's research at peer stations, et cetera."

Cats to face Tigers again, hope to come back with win tonight after initial loss this season

The next Big 12 Conference foe for the Wildcats is the Missouri Tigers on Wednesday in Columbia, Mo.

Both teams are coming off big wins for their programs. The Cats knocked off then-No. 25 Oklahoma on Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum 66-51. It was their first win against a ranked opponent in three seasons.

As for the Tigers, they beat the No. 19 Kansas Jayhawks on Sunday at Allen Fieldhouse 71-63.

Missouri will bring an impressive 13-4 record, 4-2 in conference play into the game Wednesday, while the Cats bring in a 14-6 overall record and a 3-4 mark in conference play.

Cats assistant coach Butch Hawking said they remember the loss to the Tigers earlier in the season at Bramlage.

"It'll be a very tough game at their place," Hawking said. "Norm Stewart's teams have always played hard-nosed basketball. They're a very balanced team."

"We didn't forget the loss here to them. We remember them coming in here and whipping us. They did a lot of things well offensively, but at the same time, you have to give their defense some credit. They held us to a poor shooting percentage," he said.

K-State lost the contest 78-73 against the Tigers at Bramlage on Jan. 6.

The Missouri guard play has been solid this year. Sunday against the Jayhawks, the Tiger guards combined for 33 points in the win.

Junior guard/forward Albert White, who is 6 feet 5 inches tall, has been the key to the backcourt scoring for the Tigers. His 16.8 points per game leads the team and is fifth in the Big 12, while his 8.7 rebounds per contest stands tied for fifth in the conference as well.

Going along with White are senior guard John Woods and sophomore guard Brian Grawer, who are averaging 12.9 and 8.1 points per game, respectively.

The Cats have three players in double figures for scoring.

Junior forward Tony Kitt leads the way with 10.9 points per game and is tied for fifth place in the conference with Mizzou's White with 8.7 boards per contest.

Junior Cortez Groves is averaging 10.8 points per game, while junior Josh Reid chips in 10.3 per contest.

For most of the season, Manny Dies has played under most expectations for a strong senior year after leading the Cats in scoring as a junior with 15.7 points per game, but against Oklahoma, Dies took his first steps to finishing strong this year.

He got the Sooners for 10 points and nine rebounds Saturday.

"He really stepped it up for us," said Hawking. "He accepted the challenge to guard Najera. It's a matter of consistency right now. We have to find a way to get him to come out ready every game."

K-State leads the series, which dates to 1907, between the two schools 105-102. The Tigers, on the other hand, have dominated in recent meetings, winning seven of the last 10.

GAME NOTES

K-State leads the all-time series with the Tigers 105-102, but is just 34-59 when playing in Columbia, Mo., including losing 14 in a row at the Hearnes Center. The Wildcats are 1-18 all-time in Big 12 road games. Saturday's 66-51 win against Oklahoma ended a 18-game losing streak to ranked teams in front of a season-high crowd of 12,571. K-State's bench has outscored their opponent's bench in 16 of 20 games this season. Donnie Wallace, a 6-6 forward from Goddard, Kan., and Quentin Buchanan, a 6-7 guard from Junction City have signed national letters of intent with K-State during the early signing period. The Cats will be back in action Monday at home against Kansas on ESPN.

Cats to use home court advantage

By NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGAN

The K-State Women's Basketball team is meshing as it prepares to take on Texas A&M at 7 tonight at Bramlage Coliseum.

Since the Santa Clara game almost a month ago, the Cats have gone 4-3 in the Big 12 and are tied for fourth.

The Cats are coming off a 79-67 win against Missouri on Saturday and have won three games at Bramlage.

The game was highlighted by the performance of junior transfer Olga Firsova. Against Missouri, Firsova blocked four shots and scored 13 points.

"She was willing to take contact as opposed to retaliating, and then she answered with her game," K-State coach Deb Patterson said.

The Cats hope to continue their trend against Texas A&M. The Aggies are 6-10 on the season, 1-5 in conference play, and are ranked last in the Big 12.

Patterson said the Aggies, despite their record, have weapons to watch for. "Prissy Sharpe is one of the best post-players in the game," Patterson said. Sharpe enters the game averaging 19.6 points per game and 9.8 rebounds.

With Sharpe in the middle, the Aggies look to point guard Kim Tarkington. Tarkington this season is shooting 73 percent from the line and is part of the Aggies inside-outside attack.

"Tarkington is a tremendous point guard, and they will be a handful," Patterson said. "They've played well on the road, and they are a team with a potent inside-outside attack."

Texas A&M enters the game allowing opponents an average of 65 points per game. The Cats, however, are averaging 70 points per game.

Patterson said the game is a chance for her team to continue to improve.

"We're gonna have the opportunity at home, to hold ground," Patterson said. "I would expect that we would come in with the mental intensity to do that."

With a win over Texas A&M, the Cats can surpass the number of wins they had in conference play and overall last season.

"Every night out you had better be ready to play. I can't say it enough," Patterson said. "When Texas A&M played Texas Tech close, it means something."

GAME NOTES

K-State leads the all-time series 3-2, and won the only meeting in Manhattan 73-61 in 1997. The Wildcats are 8-0 when scoring 70 points or more this season. Junior center Olga Firsova has 29 blocks this season and is on pace to break the school single-season record. Rethman leads the Big 12 in three-point field-goal percentage (.606) and three-point field goals made per game (3.3). K-State has already guaranteed itself its sixth-straight winning season. K-State unofficially ranks 28th in the conference in average attendance. The Cats will be back in action on Sunday when it hits the road to battle intrastate rival Kansas.

Game lets fans play out Final Four

REVIEW BY JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGAN

K-State might be returning to the NCAA Tournament quicker than expected. In fact, you might even help them get there.

Of course, this has absolutely nothing to do with the real men's basketball team, but with "NCAA Final Four 99" (989 Sports), diehard Wildcat fans can play out the fantasy of taking K-State to the Big Dance.

With more than 250 Division I schools, authentic courts and signature styles of play (Princeton's playbook features the essential backdoor cut), the Sony PlayStation release makes a solid challenge to giant EA Sports.

To capture college basketball, "NCAA 99" consulted former KU standout Paul Pierce, the game's cover boy, to add to the game's realism. K-State fans might cringe when they see the Jayhawk on the cover, but the game is well worth it.

The game's playbook distances itself from past games by including moves for taunting, cherry picking and forcing an intentional foul. There's even a selection called "The 6th Man Meter," a feature that gets the crowd more involved. If you're down late in the game, it never hurts to whip the Cameron Crazies of Duke into a frenzy.

The specialty moves can take a while adjusting to, but the game's basic features are mastered after one session.

If you want to start a season, your school can move from non-conference play into tournaments, during which you can track your school's progress on a top-25 poll. If you prefer an immediate invitation to the dance, pick a school in the 64-team bracket and begin your run to the championship. Or you can have an exhibition game in a variety of settings.

Most of the top Division-I schools' home courts are represented, including Bramlage Coliseum, featuring the Hardwood Powercat at midcourt that fans know all too well. Compiling statistics from last season, 989 Sports has a signature player for each school. In K-State's case, No. 4 is the most capable in a game.

All the options "NCAA 99" offers the player is nice, but what would a college basketball game be without the pipes of an announcer? Perhaps the best move 989 Sports made was avoiding decibel king Dick Vitale for a more subdued Quinn Buckner, who says just enough to make it worthwhile.

The design team behind "NCAA 99" did an excellent job creating a college basketball game that surpasses expectations, but there is much more that could have been done. For instance, the coaches pace the sidelines throughout the game, but there's nothing to distinguish them. Even Bobby Knight is calm.

Hopefully, the next college basketball game will equip Knight with chair-tossing capabilities.

Lombardi's coaching style remains etched in hearts, minds of those who remember his words of wisdom

VIEWPOINT

NICK BRATKOVICH

Super Bowl Sunday is four days away, and with it comes a tremendous extravaganza — the commercials, the halftime show and a new episode of "The Simpsons" after the game.

This game is an institution in America, and the game will cap off a season of disappointment for 29 teams. On the other hand, one team, its city and its fans, will be exceptionally happy.

That's life, I guess. It could also be John Elway's last game, and for the Kansas City Chiefs' sake let's hope it is.

He has made a career of destroying Kansas City's Super Bowl hopes and dreams.

But with Super Bowl Sunday it is important to remember a legend of the past. Thirty-three years ago, the game and the world looked much different.

The Green Bay Packers and head coach Vince Lombardi reigned supreme over the Chiefs in the first Super Bowl. Lombardi was the era's predominate coach, but imagine how Lombardi would fare were he coaching today.

How would Lombardi handle professional athletes like Utah basketball player (and former Jayhawk) Greg Ostertag? Ostertag recently brought a cellular phone to practice and talked on the phone while shooting.

I doubt Lombardi would have been happy, and he might have thrown the phone in the trash.

They pay Ostertag a lot of money, yet he is unable to focus on basketball while at practice.

Don't get me wrong. Cell phones are a fine product, but if people allow technology to control their lives, they begin to lose track of what is important.

Allowing technology to control your life might cause you to start worrying senselessly about Y2K glitches instead of living your life to the best of your ability.

Lombardi's teams had the philosophy that three things mattered: your God, your family and the Green Bay Packers.

You have to ponder what Lombardi would have said to Mark "Mighty Mouse" McMillian, who likes to impersonate the cartoon character after every play.

Just a hunch, but I bet Lombardi would have chewed him out and the charades after plays would have been stopped.

What would Lombardi do with under-achieving players? I don't think he would have had many. If you didn't play up to his level of expectations, he would find someone who would. Lombardi seemed to treat players right and knew how to motivate all of his players differently.

I realize I never met the man, but I wish I had. He was a man of honor and integrity who represented the best the world has to offer. A man's man who lived life in seemingly the right way.

When Lombardi passed away he left a legacy. Not only of the championships and aura, but many quotes and sayings still around today, shouted from the gridiron to the executive business room.

Lombardi's era was one of revolution, yet he was stable and focused.

Although Lombardi might not be the most known sports figure from generations gone by, his quotes are.

How many times on the high school practice field growing up did we hear quotes like, "It's not whether you get knocked down, it's whether you get back up," or "Winning isn't everything, but making the effort to win is."

Today, the championship trophy is named after Lombardi. Sunday, two top teams will be battling for it.

The Falcons are a Cinderella story, and the Broncos are defending champions. I wonder how Lombardi would have coached the game and what he would have said.

Who knows, but I imagine it would have been great.

seeks to declare entire groups of human beings — the unborn, the terminally ill, the handicapped and others considered 'unuseful' — to be outside the boundaries of legal protection."

Today, John Paul is scheduled to celebrate Mass before 104,000 people at the Trans World Dome.

Altogether, as many as 600,000 people are expected to turn out to see the pope in St. Louis. More than 530,000 Roman Catholics live in and around the city, which was founded by French Catholics in 1764.

At the youth rally, he was showered with adulation from young people weeping, squealing, jumping up and down and waving handkerchiefs.

"This is incredible. It's probably the biggest thing I've ever been to," said Sarah Einhorn, 14, of Effingham, Ill. "He's just an incredible role model, someone you can really look up to."

Noting the excitement in St. Louis during the home-run race between Sammy Sosa and hometown hero Mark McGwire, the pope told the young people: "You can feel the same great enthusiasm as you train for a different goal — the goal of following Christ, the goal of bringing his message to the world."

Turning more serious, he said "sometimes the world seems filled with darkness" from hunger, violence, homelessness, unemployment and drugs. "God's gift of life is being rejected. Death is chosen over life, and this brings the darkness of despair," he said.

During previous visits to the United States, home to 62 million Roman Catholics, the pope has spoken out against American materialism and consumerism.

At the airport Tuesday, John Paul avoided certain sources of tension with the United States and dropped from the advance text of his speech any mention of land mines, drug trafficking or U.S. airstrikes against Iraq, something the Vatican has assailed as "aggression."

During the 20-minute meeting between Clinton and the pope, abortion only "came up in passing" and the Monica Lewinsky affair not at all, White House spokesman P.J. Crowley said. The two did discuss Cuba and Iraq, papal spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said.

The pope is also a foe of capital punishment and has intervened in several cases in the United States.

Missouri's Supreme Court, without explanation, postponed an execution that was to have taken place while the pope was in town. Navarro-Valls called the postponement "a mockery."

After the airport reception, thousands of people hoping for a glimpse of the pontiff in his Popemobile lined the route of the papal motorcade as it made its way from the airport to St. Louis Cathedral. As the pope drew near, crowds sitting on hills rushed toward the temporary fences, cheering, waving banners and chanting, "John Paul II, we love you!"

Margaret Wilson, 81, sat in a folding chair for six hours at a spot along the route.

"I can't imagine I'd ever get this close to the pope," she said. "I'm glad I've lived long enough so I could see this."

In Mexico last week, the pope signed a declaration setting out the church's goals in the Americas for the new millennium.

It condemned exploitative capitalism, drug trafficking, corruption and "the culture of death" — abortion, euthanasia and capital punishment. He also said the church must try harder to reach the rich and powerful, not just the poor.

Senate might vote on witnesses today

By DAVID ESPO
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — House prosecutors pleaded with the Senate on Tuesday to issue subpoenas for "a pitiful three" impeachment trial witnesses — Monica Lewinsky and two others — and to request that President Clinton answer questions under oath.

As the Senate went behind closed doors to debate the witness issue, the White House said Clinton has no intention of submitting to questioning, even if confronted with a request for it. "It's time to wrap this up," presidential spokesman Joe Lockhart said of the trial, in its third week.

Clinton's lawyers, joined by Senate Democrats, also said the issuance of subpoenas for depositions from Lewinsky, presidential friend Vernon Jordan and White House aide Sidney Blumenthal would raise the possibility of long delays in the proceedings.

Senators in both parties, emerging from the three-hour closed-door session, said revived negotiations were under way on a bipartisan timetable for a final vote on the articles of impeachment by the middle of next month — after witnesses are deposed on videotape.

"The procedural aspects, after the votes go forward, the process by which witnesses would be deposed and so on" are the focus of the talks, Sen. Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, said.

One Democratic official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said it was possible the White House would be asked if it wanted any witnesses deposed, and they, too, would be added to the list under a compressed timetable that envisioned a final vote on Clinton's fate within two weeks.

The prosecutors said they had trimmed their list to pass Senate muster. "A pitiful three, and I would think you would want to proceed with that minimum testimony," Rep. Henry Hyde, lead prosecutor, said.

Democratic leader Tom Daschle said the Republicans, with a 55-45 majority, were likely to prevail when the roll is called on Wednesday, forcing approval of subpoenas for Lewinsky, Jordan and Blumenthal. "I think it's going to be virtually a party-line vote, unfortunately," he said.

As for questioning Clinton, he said, "That's a red herring. It is not going anywhere."

All witnesses would be questioned under oath at private depositions about the facts concerning allegations of perjury and obstruction of justice by the president in connection with his efforts to conceal a sexual relationship with Lewinsky.

Guidelines for the questioning remain to be worked out.

Tuesday's closed-door Senate session was the second in as many nights.

As was the case on Monday, a request by Democratic Sens. Tom Harkin of Iowa and Paul Wellstone of Minnesota to open the doors was rejected.

The winnowed list of three witnesses marked a concession by the House prosecutors, who were fearful that a more extensive request would cost them the support of wavering Republicans and seal the defeat of their effort for testimony.

The president's lawyers and Democratic allies reacted with a mixture of scorn and warnings, knowing that public opinion polls favor a swift end to the trial and that Clinton's acquittal on charges of perjury and obstruction of justice is virtually assured.

"The time to end the trial is now, and the correct number of witnesses is zero," Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts told reporters in an interview off the Senate floor.

The day's events set the stage for a pair of showdown votes today, first on a proposal by Democratic Sen. Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia to dismiss all charges and bring the trial to an end, then on the call for depositions. Byrd's proposal is widely expected to fail by a party-line vote or more.

The second vote would take place on the call for subpoenas only, meaning that the Senate will not vote, for the time being at least, on whether to request that Clinton submit to a deposition. Majority Leader Trent Lott has labored behind the scenes to make sure GOP defections don't doom the proposal for subpoenas.

If the proposal is approved, the Senate still would have to resolve numerous details about the subpoenas, as well as grapple with White House demands for an extensive time to review records not previously made available to the president's lawyers.

With Republicans professing eagerness to wrap up the trial quickly, Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., circulated proposed ground rules at a closed-door GOP caucus.

They would call for each witness to be deposed for a maximum of four hours, two hours for the House and two hours for the president's lawyers. Witnesses could be questioned only about areas of factual dispute. The sessions would be videotaped for senators to view.

Following the depositions, the Senate would decide whether to approve live testimony in the well of the Senate.

Lott's spokesman, John Czwartacki, said the Mississippi Republican hopes the depositions can be wrapped up by early next week.

GOP officials also said Lott had mentioned a possibility during a closed-door caucus of having the Senate vote on a non-binding resolution declaring that Clinton had committed perjury and obstruction of justice, even though he would hold onto his office.

DIALING

services charge monthly fees, per-call fees or have minimum talk times.

■ Confusion over the discount: for instance, 20-percent cheaper compared to what price?

■ Difficulty contacting the company with problems.

Two big marketers of dial-around services — MCI and AT&T — said their ads are clear.

"There's been some criticism, but I will let our ads stand on their own," said Howard McNally, president of AT&T's Lucky Dog Phone Co., which runs 10-10-345. "If you look at our TV advertising, look at our direct mail, we think our pricing is very, very clear."

Like many other companies, MCI and AT&T purposefully keep their corporate names out of dial-around ads.

That's done to create a separate brand identity for a service that targets customers looking for a bargain.

That means consumers should do their homework, calculating the math and reading the fine print — even if it's just flashed at the bottom of a TV ad, said Samuel Simon of the Telecommunications Research & Action Center, which monitors phone rates.

"There's already a huge amount of consumer confusion out there about getting the best deal for phone service — and ads for dial-around services have added to that," Simon said.

Callers need not switch from their current long-distance carrier to use a dial-around; they can just dial a seven-digit access code.

The charges from the dial-around company usually show up on the customer's regular phone bill.

Navdeep Singh of Dallas said he's sworn off all dial-arounds after a problem with 10-10-297. Singh said he was promised one rate in writing, and was charged another.

Although the overcharge only amounted to about $15 for three months, the aggravation of trying to get the problem fixed drove him to complain to the FCC.

Dial-around is small but growing: It's projected to be a $3 billion business by year's end.

Kennard said he finds "particularly galling" an ad saying a consumer can make a 20-minute call for 99 cents.

That ad is for MCI's 10-10-220 service. One newspaper ad says: "Time can be expensive." It says a 20-minute cab ride costs $19 and a 20-minute tanning session costs $20. "Or, time can be cheap," the ad says, showing a telephone with the message "20-minute phone call 99 cents."

Kennard said, "Consumers know that's 5 cents a minute and that's a pretty good rate."

If the consumer is on the phone for less than 20 minutes, they still must pay the full amount, Kennard said.

The ad does say: "only 99 cents for all calls up to 20 minutes," but Kennard said he doesn't think it's clear enough.

MCI's Burns defends the ads, saying they're clear. More than 85 percent of MCI's dial-around users are repeat customers, he notes.

The typical call on 10-10-220 lasts 15 minutes, he says, making the per-minute charge 6.6 cents.

In a TV ad for AT&T's 10-10-345, viewers are told: "It's always 10 cents a minute."

But small print that quickly disappears says there's a 10-cent connection charge. That means the first minute is 20 cents.

MUSEUM

Each room has a volunteer that gives a synopsis of a particular responsibility or chore such as washing clothes or ironing, and then demonstrates how it was done.

"Every year we try to change or do something different to make it better," Williams said. "This makes it more interesting. This year we implemented the laundry room."

Other volunteers talked about how to conserve labor in the kitchen and also how to utilize five pitchers of water to take a bath. Some volunteers dressed in costumes from that era, while others made their own to add authenticity. The most popular room was the parlor, where some children danced to an old music box.

Glasscow said she would like to see more people visit the museum.

The museum is open 1-5 p.m. on Saturday and 2-5 p.m. on Sunday. Special appointments can be arranged by calling the Riley County Historical Museum. The house is located at 630 Fremont St.

HOGS

said. "For others who have been in it longer, they might just tough it out."

Some K-State students' families own and operate hog operations in Kansas, and the situation has affected them in many ways.

Michael Springer, junior in agricultural economics, comes from a family hog operation in Independence, Kan., that his grandfather started in the 1950s. He said producers like his family have to wait for prices to rise again.

"The lowest we sold at was for $12 a hundredweight in December," Springer said. He said producers who sell directly to the packers are better off than those who sell through an auction barn. His family sells its market pigs to a company in Guymon, Okla.

The market is currently in an upswing, but producers will continue to feel the effects of the past six months for a long time.

To aid producers, the government has created several opportunities for assistance.

For example, the USDA has announced it will spend about $50 million in direct cash payments to family-farm hog producers so they can meet living and operating expenses. Loan deferments for 1998 farm ownership and operating loans are also available for farmers.

The USDA also bought more than $70 million worth of pork in 1998 to boost prices and provide food for federal assistance programs.

Two nationwide packers have also vowed to aid hog producers. Hatfield Quality Meats and Farmland Foods Inc. have set voluntary minimum prices of $25 and $15 per hundredweight for live hogs sold between Sept. 1, 1997 and Dec. 19, 1998.

The pork industry itself has also come up with many suggestions trying to help the situation. The industry has suggested lifting the restrictions on live hog exports to Mexico and aiding the Canadian government in increasing Canadian packer capacity so U.S. pigs don't have as much foreign competition.

It also would like more pork and pork products to be purchased by the government to be used in domestic and international feeding and humanitarian assistance programs.

Nelissen said the best way to ensure that this never happens again is to create a better system of estimating the number of live hogs that will be produced. Until then, he said, businesses will be basing their decisions on bad numbers.

Airport plans for expansion

By JENNIFER O'NEILL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The new year will bring new changes to Manhattan Regional Airport as it launches its plans for expansion after a decline in airport use in 1998.

US Airways Express is the only airline featured at the airport now. However, Airport Director Ken Black is working with Mayor Steve Hall and Dan Colantone, president of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, to bring in additional airline carriers.

The group is in discussion with TWA Express to St. Louis and American Eagle and United Express Service to Denver in order to expand service to Manhattan.

"We recognize that there is a need here for additional service," Colantone said. "We go to these airlines to help sell the story of Manhattan."

Two main factors come into play at these meetings.

First, all airlines have number requests — is there a big enough demand in the community to start up an airline in a new market? This leaves Manhattan competing with other communities.

The second factor is that airlines don't have enough planes to supply to every community that requests their service.

There are 20 cities ahead of Manhattan requesting service from TWA Express. Black and his group did a market comparison of Manhattan to the other 20 contenders.

"We compared favorably to those cities," he said. "In fact, we ranked among the top five."

However, many airlines might not have the capability to supply the planes for up to three years even in creditable markets, Black said.

Besides getting more planes, the airport is working on the extension of the primary taxiway to the end of runway three. As of now, the primary taxiway stops short of 2,000 feet.

"It's a big capacity and safety issue for the airport," Black said.

Funding for the runway expansion is provided by the Airport Improvement Program. Ninety percent of the cost will come from the Aviation Trust Fund through the Federal Aviation Administration, and 10 percent will be paid by the city.

Another project is the new general aviation facility that is under construction and will open at the end of March. The facility will accommodate anyone who isn't associated with an airline, such as the military, businesses and personal planes.

Black said he hopes that with a new carrier and the new additions, airport use will go up.

Last year's figures indicate that airport use in 1998 was down by nearly 7.5 percent from 1997.

The decline in use was due to US Airways raising its fares too high, Black said.

He said he recently recognized the problem was that the airline restructured its fares to focus more on revenue generated than seats filled.

Airport tower operations also are down slightly from last year but higher than in 1996.

The decline in numbers is similar in other cities across Kansas that the airline serves.

"We all have the same feeling," Black said. "The problem isn't unique to Manhattan."

■ Students may apply for decreased rates as part of Higher Education Act.

By SARA MARTIN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student loan interest rates have reached their lowest point in 17 years after a unanimous vote by Congress.

A temporary measure last summer to cut interest rates by 0.79 percent now is permanently in place as part of the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act.

"I think Congress is beginning to respond to concerns of middle America," said Robert Gamez, associate director of operations for the Office of Student Financial Assistance. "If you look at any poll, education is always in the top five as far as topics of concern. Reauthorization did a lot of things in the right direction."

Interest rates for Student Direct Loans and Federal Family Education Loan Program loans for in school now — in a grace period or in a deferment — are now at 6.86 percent; the rest are at 7.46 percent. The rates have dropped from 8.25 percent because of the vote.

"The decreased rates are significant to students in the sense that the more a student borrows, the more even small changes in the interest rate will affect the student down the road," Gamez said.

While the reductions might not seem like much, Gamez said the amount a student might save in the long run is significant. The average K-State undergraduate student with loans will owe $15,000 at the time of graduation. The new interest rates mean a savings of $750 in interest for the average loan, or about $50 saved per $1,000 borrowed.

However, according to Gamez, many students with loans don't pay attention to the specifics.

"We have students who visit the office and are very conscientious and well aware of the money they borrow each semester," said Gamez. "There are also some who don't pay as close attention to the aggregates they've borrowed."

Jeff Defrain, senior in animal sciences and industry from Nebraska, said that because his tuition is out-of-state, the future of his loans is important to him.

"I haven't borrowed as much as I thought I'd have to," Defrain said. "If someone cut me a check for $700 right now, I'd say 'Hey, there's two months' rent plus maybe the tip of the utilities.' I'd take the money and run. It's a great deal."

Sometimes, the importance of a lower interest rate doesn't come to light until graduation approaches.

"Now, my loans are extremely important to me, knowing that in six months after graduation I have to pay them back," Allyson Heverley, graduate student in business, said. "So of course I want the lowest interest rate possible."

Heverley said her friends in undergraduate school started to pay back their loans early to avoid paying extra interest, although it didn't seem like much money.

"Because you pay back in increments, I'd say initially you don't feel it's a lot of money," Heverley said.

"I'm hoping to be able to make larger payments to get the loans paid off."

"When you take them out, you don't think about paying them off later when you're married and have a house bill and things like that," she said.

The bill also increases the annual limit of Perkins Loans from $3,000 to $4,000 for undergraduates and from $5,000 to $6,000 for graduate students. The maximum total amount a student can borrow with a Perkins Loan also has increased from $15,000 to $20,000 for undergraduates and from $30,000 to $40,000 for graduate students.

Pell Grants also will see a gradual increase in the maximum amount allowed, from $3,000 now to $5,800 for fiscal year 2003-2004.

Graduating students also can take advantage of the lower interest rates by consolidating past loans.

The deadline for December 1998 graduates is Feb. 1.

Students wishing to consolidate under the new rates may not be enrolled in school and must have Direct Loans only.

Students who have ever accepted FFEI or Stafford Loans are not eligible for consolidation under the new rates.

However, Gamez said to check with the FFEI lenders for special rates they might be offering.

For more information about consolidation, or to find a consolidation application, students should visit the World Wide Web at www.ed.gov/offices/OPE/DirectLoan/.

Questions arise in Albanian deaths

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia — Finnish forensic experts investigating how 45 ethnic Albanian villagers were killed might be unable to determine whether they were massacred or shot in battle because of the possibility of evidence-tampering, the lead pathologist said Tuesday.

The remarks by Helena Ranta suggest the world might never learn for sure the truth of the Racak village killings, which sparked international outrage and renewed calls for NATO action against the government of Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic.

The U.S. chief of the international peace monitors, William Walker, has accused Serb police of killing the civilians and called the slayings a massacre.

Yugoslav authorities claim the dead were rebels killed in battle. They ordered Walker expelled for his comments but froze the order after strong international pressure.

Ranta stressed Tuesday that she was not accusing anyone of tampering with the bodies, but said the possibility could not be ruled out.

The bodies, including a boy and three women, were moved without supervision — first by ethnic Albanians to a mosque in Racak and later by Serb police to the Pristina morgue. In addition, Ranta said Yugoslav authorities already had conducted autopsies on about a third of the bodies before her team arrived.

"The problem as we see it, it is difficult to reconstruct the 'chain of custody' over the bodies," she said. "There is a possibility of contamination and a possibility of fabrication of evidence."

Ranta said some of the bodies tested positive on paraffin tests, indicating they might have fired a weapon.

But paraffin tests are widely discounted in U.S. courts because tobacco and fertilizers often give the same results as gunpowder. The dead were mostly farmers in a region where smoking is nearly universal among males.

John Pickle, co-owner of the Gamer in Aggieville (left), and Scott Adair, junior in park/resource management (right), laugh while playing "Legend of the Five Rings." The role-playing game is a fantasy world based on Japanese and Chinese mythology.

Playing With Fantasy

Card, role-playing games offer alternative form of entertainment

A folder describing the game "Legend of the Five Rings" sits in front of John Pickle, who was running the game. Details include information about characters in the story, places in the story and power structure in different towns in the story.

When people want to get away, sometimes they take a vacation. Others take a journey into a fantasy realm of card and role-playing games.

Players can choose from several games that are on the market. The most popular are collectible card games, where players purchase cards for a deck and create stories and situations with the cards. Role-playing games are another type, where a group of players create a story for their characters to act out and the story is led by a storyteller. Players can create their own characters and give them strengths and weaknesses to enhance the story.

Of all the card games, the most popular is "Magic: the Gathering," said Doug Hurley, graduate student in theater and an employee of The Gatekeeper, a store in Aggieville that specializes in role-playing materials.

"All you have to do is make a deck and find someone to sit down and play with," Hurley said.

Of all the card games available, "Magic" has the largest collection of cards.

"None of the other games have the depth in the number of cards like 'Magic' does," said Dan Ireton, freshman in theater and Gatekeeper employee.

Some cards have monetary value, although Ireton said people who collect cards for their monetary value are rare.

"The collectors are few and far between," Ireton said. "Most buy a pack or two to play with instead of collecting them for their value."

Some collectors are serious, though.

"There once was a guy in here from Topeka," Ireton said. "He had a box of cards worth over $60,000."

Steve Elder, owner of The Gamer, said collectors are known to spend large amounts of money on the card games.

"I know people who have pumped thousands of dollars into the card games," he said.

Elder said there is a large difference between collectors and gamers.

"The difference between real gamers and collectors is that gamers play for fun," he said. "They come down and play all the time, whereas the collectors come in, buy something and split."

At area stores such as The Gamer, there are tables in the store where players can sit and play with the cards or with miniatures. Elder said this gives the establishment a sense of community.

"Playing at these tables helps you to get to know people," he said.

"A lot of the stores in the bigger cities charge for you to use the tables, but it's free here."

Role-playing games have been around longer than fantasy card games but have decreased slightly in popularity since the development of the collectible card games.

The most popular of the role-playing games is "Advanced Dungeons and Dragons," a game that has been on the market for more than 20 years.

"AD&D does well," Hurley said. "When it has that much history, most people have played it when they were younger."

In addition, there are many different varieties of role-playing games. The settings for these games include feudal Asian settings, military campaigns, futuristic space missions and many other genres as well.

"You get the setting you are interested in," Hurley said.

The role playing games are not just a matter of rolling dice and battling monsters. They should involve a creative storytelling process.

"The best games are the ones where you can ignore the rules," Ireton said. "The dice are just used as an aid. You should be trying to tell a story."

"The best games are the ones that say the rules are just an aid, if they hinder you, then ignore them," he said.

Many of the games have crossover elements, games that can be played with cards or as role-playing games. One game, "Legends of the Five Rings," is set in an Asian-feudal setting. Not only does it have a card game, but there is an role-playing game for it as well.

The games are designed not just to be played but to give the players a chance to create whatever world they want.

"You are only limited by what you can imagine," Hurley said.

In Manhattan, games can be found at The Gatekeeper, Game Guy and The Gamer.

Groups offer answers to questions about sexuality

By NAOMI MCHUGH
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

College can be a difficult time for some students. In addition to the concerns of classes and a job, some students might have the added complication of questioning their sexual orientation.

What many people might not know is that there are places on campus where they can go and talk with someone. Still, sometimes just talking about these feelings can be difficult, said Dr. Barbara Pearson, counselor at University Counseling Services.

"Often I think the hardest thing to do is to talk about it, to say that you are having these feelings," she said.

University Counseling Services, located on the second floor of Lafene Health Center, offers brochures and other literature about issues surrounding sexual orientation. If someone needs more personal assistance, Pearson said, there are counselors willing to help.

Another resource on campus is the Women's Center. Director Susan Allen said it is not at all uncommon for students dealing with questions about their sexuality to come to the center.

"Sometimes sisters or brothers or friends need to talk about how they feel, but if we don't know what to think about it, it's hard to talk about it," Allen said. "I think people need to deal with the issues so that they can be accepting."

There are two groups on campus for students who are questioning their sexuality and looking for support. The Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Society is a student organization for those of any sexual orientation who want to become active in the gay, lesbian and bisexual community and learn more about the gay, lesbian and bisexual resources in the area. BGSL meets at 5 p.m. the first and third Sundays of every month in Union 213.

A subsidiary group of BGSL is IceBreakers, a discussion and support group. According to the BGSL World Wide Web site, IceBreakers is a group dedicated to providing individuals with a private safe environment where they can explore issues concerning their sexual orientation. IceBreakers meets at 7 p.m. every Wednesday; the location of the meetings is undisclosed to protect the anonymity of students. Those interested in IceBreakers can e-mail BGSL at bgsl@ksu.edu or contact University Counseling Services for more information.

Paul Donovan, graduate student in college student personnel and secretary of BGSL, said he has benefited from his three-year involvement with the student groups.

"I met a bunch of people who were going through the same things as me, and I realized everyone knew where I was coming from," Donovan said.

People who want to talk with someone about their sexuality in a safe environment can look for the symbol of Willie the Wildcat over a pink triangle. The image identifies a safe place where people — whether they are students or faculty members — can go if they need help or advice.

Allen said she thinks K-State has good resources and people who are accepting about the subject.

Those who live on campus who are questioning their sexuality can talk to authority figures in the residence halls who might offer assistance. Resident assistants, residence life coordinators and assistant residence life coordinators are available as resources.

"I think it is important that students know that there are people out there they can talk to, and I don't think a lot of people know that," said Mike Messner, residence life coordinator at Goodnow Hall. "Don't be afraid to seek help if you have questions or want to get hooked up with what's going on on campus."

Students, conservative groups attack schools' diversity policy

■ Plaintiffs allege racial preferences illegally kept them from top universities.

By ANJETTA MCQUEEN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — They say the color of their skin kept them out of the schools of their choice. Now, Katoria Smith, a white former law school candidate from Washington state, and Jessie Tompkins, a black college student from Alabama, are in court.

"I want a future where students can apply ... without worrying that their skin color will keep them out," said Smith, whose case against the University of Washington law school, which denied her admission, goes to trial next month.

Smith spoke Tuesday at a news conference sponsored by conservative groups to launch a campaign charging the nation's top colleges with illegally using racial preferences in admissions.

The Center for Individual Rights — a conservative private law firm handling the cases for Smith and Tompkins — is running ads in student newspapers headlined "Guilty by Admission" that say nearly every elite college in the United States violates the law.

But many educators say the conservatives have misrepresented 20 years of court rulings and overstated colleges' efforts to increase diversity.

"Colleges do not just seek racial and ethnic diversity when composing a class," said Deborah Wilds of the American Council on Education, a Washington umbrella group for 1,800 public and private universities.

The center also issued handbooks, it says, to help students identify discrimination and to help institutions keep from getting sued.

But critics say the handbook is designed to encourage lawsuits such as the one by Tompkins, who is suing over a whites-only scholarship at historically black Alabama State.

"Colleges very clearly understand they may not use quotas," said Norma Cantu, the assistant secretary for the Education Department's Office of Civil Rights, referring to programs that don't consider a student's merit.

"There's no need for a handbook," she said.

According to the government, minorities made up 25.3 percent of college enrollment in 1995, up from 16.5 percent in 1980.

Conservatives, including former Education Secretary William J. Bennett, who called college diversity programs "an antithesis of the civil rights movement," cited anecdotal evidence and a handful of state-specific studies as evidence that race preference without merit is widespread.

Another group supporting the campaign, The Center for Equal Opportunity, will release a study today concluding that the odds of a white candidate being admitted to a public university in Virginia instead of an equally qualified black candidate are 45 to 1.

The data, based on 1996 applications for 10 public Virginia universities, include the race, sex, SAT scores, class rank and high school grade point averages of 72,000 applicants who were admitted or rejected.

"We've found use of racial ethnic preference in all of the states. The more selective schools tend to use preferences the most," said Roger Clegg, general counsel for the group.

Rene Redwood, executive director of Fair Chance, a group that advises colleges and community groups on affirmative action, says many programs with preferences still are needed.

"We have studies that show that there are communities that are healthier because women and minorities who become doctors often return to those communities," Redwood said.

Both sides in the affirmative action battle cite the 1978 Bakke case, in which a white student denied admission to medical school claimed specific slots for minority students were unconstitutional.

The Supreme Court decided colleges could not have separate admissions criteria for minority students, but could consider race a "plus" factor.

In 1996, a federal appeals court in the Hopwood case from Texas essentially contradicted Bakke and barred the consideration of race in admissions and financial-aid decisions, citing other high court rulings involving government contracting.

The Supreme Court has refused to hear Hopwood, but it is binding only in the appeals court's region of Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi.

Colleges also must consider state ballot measures, such as California's 1996 Proposition 209, that ban many racial preferences.

Coalition wants living wage

By CHRISTINE ROEGER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The stock market is at record highs and unemployment is at record lows, but some workers still find it hard to make ends meet.

Mary Jo Murphy, a Manhattan working mother, faced this reality. For 11 years she struggled through life more than she enjoyed it. Murphy labored for minimum wage.

"Each month I feared to pay my rent," she said. "We needed all sorts of subsidies — it was very embarrassing."

Today, Murphy works for the Flint Hills Living Wage Coalition. The Coalition is running a campaign to address declining wages in the midst of economic wealth.

Murphy did not go to college. Jobs in a convenience store, a gas station and restaurants kept Murphy and her two daughters alive.

Working in a factory was the only time she earned a decent wage, Murphy said. Unfortunately, she had to quit, because the repetitive work had caused health problems.

"My older daughter refused to eat at school, as she feared to be teased for her free meals," she said.

Statistics from the Flint Hills Breadbasket highlight the rising number of poor employees: in 1996, 12 percent of Breadbasket customers worked but needed subsidies. In 1998, the number jumped up to 48 percent.

"The minimum wage is far below the poverty line," said John Exdell, who founded the Flint Hills Living Wage Campaign with other activists in February 1998.

According to a nationwide study by the Economic Policy Institute in Washington, D.C., the real value of minimum wage has dropped 25 percent from its high point in 1968.

"The growing inequality between the rich and the poor is not acceptable," Exdell said.

An associate professor of philosophy at K-State, Exdell urged K-State students to become active for the campaign.

"I know students who work 20 hours a week," he said. "This is way too much to commit yourself to academic work and education experience."

Since its founding last year, the coalition has grown steadily. Local organizations like the Manhattan Emergency Shelter, Speak United and the Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice are among the members.

Murphy said there are already 25 people from several groups on the board.

Last year, the coalition conducted a study to define the living wage in the Manhattan area. A living wage is the amount of money a person must earn to pay for all of the necessities in life.

According to the study, a family in Manhattan needs to earn $8.11 per hour with health benefits included to pay for all the necessities in life. The study accounted for health insurance, food, electrical bills and the cost of raising a child.

The group wants to make the case for its study, Exdell said. The strategy of the campaign is to pass local legislation that forces companies to pay a wage above poverty line.

One way would be to add a living-wage ordinance to the Manhattan Economic Development Opportunity Fund, Murphy said. The mission of the fund is to strengthen the local economy and identify investment opportunities.

"In recent years, nearly half of all companies who received money from the economic development fund paid less than the living wage," Murphy said.

For anyone interested in learning more about the coalition, Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now's living-wage expert, Jen Kern, is coming to Manhattan to speak about the progress of the National Living Wage Movement. From 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday at Peace Lutheran Church, a workshop will be conducted by ACORN with the support of a sustainable Manhattan grant. For reservations, call Mary Jo Murphy at 565-9757.

SWAN LAKE

CHRISTOPH PRÉGARDIEN

ORDER YOUR TICKETS TODAY!

The world's most popular ballet began life as a turkey, or at least an ugly duckling. The first performance of Swan Lake, at Moscow's Bolshoi Theater in 1877, was a disaster. The prima ballerina was an over-the-hill dancer who did not understand the Tchaikovsky score and interpolated numbers from her other repertoire.

Choreographers Marius Petipa, and Lev Ivanov, reset the boy-meets-girl/swan tale for St. Petersburg's Maryinsky Theatre in 1895 and the ballet has been danced by companies the world over ever since.

Grammy-nominated Christoph Prégardien is widely regarded as one of the top lyric tenors in the world. He has sung with the opera companies of Frankfurt, Stuttgart, Hamburg, Cairo and Antwerp, and has made more than 30 CDs.

"Prégardien is an exquisite lyric tenor with bull's-eye intonation and a keen ear for language and musical gestures that make him an ideal Leier interpreter," The Toronto Globe and Mail.

At McCain he plans a program that will include songs by Schumann, Beethoven, Loewe, Schubert and Wolf. Find out why the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette hailed a Prégardien concert as a "program that virtually defined what the art of singing was about."

Kansas Republicans propose changes in child welfare funding

By LEW FERGUSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Senate Republicans on Tuesday outlined a five-point initiative to improve the state's child welfare system, including spending $2 million more to recruit foster parents and guardians and to speed up the adoption process.

During a news conference, Senate Majority Leader Tim Emert said the proposals were a recognition that the Legislature didn't provide adequate funding when it authorized turning state foster care, adoption and family preservation services over to private agencies in 1996.

"Senate Republicans believe there is still a major crisis in foster care and other parts of the child welfare system," Emert said. "We believe that we have more Kansas kids than ever getting better care and services, yet we have a crisis on our hands."

That crisis, Emert said as he was surrounded by about 20 other GOP senators in the Old Supreme Court Chamber, is one of slow placement of children in foster homes and then not moving them out quickly enough into adoptive and guardian homes.

"We've got thousands of kids in the system, and we can't just walk away from that," Emert, R-Independence, said.

Proposal would spend additional $2 million to improve child services

"We do not admit that it's all screwed up. But I think there is plenty of blame to go around in all three branches of government, and you can start with the Legislature," he said.

The GOP child welfare initiative would:

■ Double to $500,000 the money spent training case workers, foster parents, court personnel and judges who handle adoption and parental rights severance cases. "That was one of the faults (of privatization) in the beginning," Emert said.

■ Spend $500,000 to recruit more foster parents. A shortage of foster parents, Emert said, is a huge problem in urban areas.

■ Spend $1 million to increase the number of guardians, people who can't or don't adopt children but are willing to have them live permanently in their homes.

With the additional spending, Emert said, "We believe we can move 600 kids out of the system."

The funding would be added to an emergency disaster aid bill now in the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

Change laws to give courts more flexibility in handling foster care and adoption cases.

This includes such things as allowing foster care orders to be issued without a hearing when the natural parents and foster parents agree on the conditions under which the children are being taken.

■ Require school districts to speed up the transfer of records that must follow children transferred from their homes to foster homes or guardians.

"You wouldn't think that would be a problem," Emert said, but some districts won't release them.

Since the child welfare services were turned over to private agencies under contract in mid-1996, family preservation services have been made available in all 105 counties, not just 40 as before, and 4,220 families were served in the first two years.

Adoptions during that time increased by 950, or 81 percent, and placements in foster homes totaled 4,600.

Pontiff ends journey with Mass in St. Louis

By JULIA LIEBLICH
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. LOUIS — Winding up his six-day journey to the Americas, Pope John Paul II condemned capital punishment Wednesday in some of the strongest terms yet and told the United States that with power comes moral responsibility.

"Radical changes in world politics leave America with a heightened responsibility to be for the world an example of genuinely free, democratic, just and humane society," he said at a prayer service attended by 2,000 people at the Cathedral Basilica.

Power is "service, not privilege. Its exercise is morally justifiable when it is used for the good of all, when it is sensitive to the needs of the poor and defenseless," the Pope said.

Earlier in the day, he urged 100,000 worshippers at a Mass in this death-penalty state to spare even those who have "done great evil."

"Modern society has the means of protecting itself without definitively denying criminals the chance to reform," he said at the Trans World Dome, addressing the biggest crowd of his 30-hour visit to the United States.

"I renew the appeal I made most recently at Christmas for a consensus to end the death penalty, which is both cruel and unnecessary."

JOHN PAUL II

The message might have had particular relevance in Missouri, where the state Supreme Court without explanation postponed an execution that was to have taken place while the pope was in town. Papal spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls called the delay "a mockery." On Jan. 13, a killer was executed by injection in Missouri.

John Paul, making his fifth trip to the U.S. mainland, also called for an end to racism. Racism is "a plague which your bishops have called one of the most persistent and destructive evils of the nation," the stooped, 78-year-old pontiff said, his voice hoarse and his words slurred.

Late Wednesday, he met briefly with 85-year-old civil rights pioneer Rosa Parks, the black seamstress whose refusal to give up her seat on a segregated bus in 1955 led to the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott.

John Paul was also scheduled to meet with Vice President Al Gore before leaving for Rome on Wednesday night.

During the evening prayer service, the pope welcomed Muslims and Jews who joined him in the Romanesque cathedral that houses the world's largest collection of mosaics. For the first time, a rabbi, Robert P. Jacobs, participated in a Roman Catholic papal prayer service.

"May this prayer signify our shared commitment to ever greater understanding and cooperation," the pope said.

At the Trans World Dome, the faithful came for blessings, cures or just a glimpse of the man credited with hastening the fall of Communism and lessening religious restrictions in Cuba.

More than 100,000 people filled the seats of the stadium and an adjacent convention center, where the pope's image was projected on giant screens with captions of his homily. One thousand priests celebrated the Mass with the pontiff.

Ida Costa, a cancer-stricken 77-year-old woman from Little Rock, Ark., looked for a miracle cure from the pope: "I'll get the blessings God wants to shower upon me in his presence."

Linda Mary DeLoneis of Springfield, Ill., was a forest ranger when she saw the pope in Denver in 1993. "Part of the pope's final blessing was a prayer for vocations," she said. She has since become a nun.

The pope's condemnation of the death penalty brought mixed reactions from those at the Mass.

"I don't know. I guess we've all got a right to live, but I don't know, especially when they take someone else's life," William Walker of Alton, Ill., said.

"As a Catholic, it's easy to be against abortion," Douglas Marshall of St. Louis said. But as for sparing the life of an evil person, "that's the thing. It all boils down to a matter of forgiveness. Are you willing to forgive an evil person?"

The pope arrived in St. Louis on Tuesday after five triumphant days in Mexico. He met with President Clinton and attended a youth rally where he got rock-star treatment from the crowd of 20,000. His message: that Americans should use their freedoms responsibly and strive for a higher moral standard.

"It was exciting for the pope to go back and start his pilgrimage in Mexico, to close the gap between Mexico and the United States," Rosalia Vazquez, 21, said in St. Louis.

GOP leader will focus on salaries

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Faculty salaries and higher education are just two of the things on which Rep. Kent Glasscock said he wants to focus as House Majority Leader this legislative session.

Glasscock, R-Manhattan, said his main focus is the faculty salary issue.

Gov. Bill Graves just approved an average 4.7-percent increase in faculty salaries, but Glasscock said he wants to enhance that pool of money so it can have a larger effect.

"We want to do what we can to make that number higher," he said. He said he wants to put in place money that will attract and retain outstanding faculty.

K-State's legislative liaison Sue Peterson said she also wants Glasscock to focus largely on faculty salaries.

"We're going to work very hard and very diligently with Representative Glasscock to see if we can get the Legislature to add the funding," she said.

She said K-State is hoping to pay on average a 7.6-percent increase.

Another issue Glasscock said he wants to concentrate on is higher education. He said he wants to see what can be done for higher education in Kansas that will have the best results for K-State.

Recently, a statewide task force proposed a plan to Gov. Bill Graves and the Kansas Legislature that would restructure higher education in Kansas.

The proposal includes adding two governing boards. One would be a Board of Trustees to oversee Kansas technical and community colleges, and the other would be a higher-education coordinating council to resolve conflicts between the Board of Trustees and the Kansas Board of Regents. The State Board of Education, which now governs community colleges as well as primary and secondary schools, would govern only K-12.

"I want to make sure that any restructuring that is done will benefit K-State and the higher education system, not harm it," Glasscock said.

Peterson said they are monitoring all plans for higher education at this point.

"We're just in a wait-and-see mode to see who comes up with what when," she said.

Library funding is also on Glasscock's agenda this session.

Senate OKs testimony from Lewinsky, others

By DAVID ESPO
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Republican-controlled Senate blocked dismissal of the impeachment case against President Clinton on Wednesday and then voted for new testimony from Monica Lewinsky and two other witnesses — but by margins well short of the two-thirds needed to oust the president.

In a pair of roll calls in the hushed Senate chamber, all 55 Republicans voted against dismissal and for the witnesses opposed by the White House. They were joined by a single Democrat, Russell Feingold of Wisconsin, leaving them far below the 67 needed for conviction.

"The president will not be removed from office," Senate Democratic leader Tom Daschle declared moments later in comments swiftly seconded by the White House. "For the good of the country and in keeping with the Constitution, it is now time to end this trial."

Even before the votes, Daschle and Majority Leader Trent Lott were at work trying to fashion a bipartisan agreement for the balance of the trial, including videotaped depositions of Lewinsky, presidential friend Vernon Jordan and White House aide Sidney Blumenthal.

By late afternoon, Lott told reporters the two parties had exchanged offers and he said he was hopeful for agreement today on a timetable for a final vote on the articles of impeachment by mid-February. He suggested the witness depositions — possibly videotaped — could take place over the weekend or Monday, and left open the question of whether the White House might then decide it wanted witnesses of its own.

Daschle, too, said he was hopeful of an agreement within 24 hours.

There was no debate on the Senate floor before Wednesday's two votes, but numerous senators issued written statements afterward.

"I believe it is premature to dismiss this case at the present time," said Richard Shelby, an Alabama Republican who previously had expressed misgivings about witnesses. He said he believed the prosecution "should be allowed the opportunity to demonstrate whether there is new and significant information that would justify live testimony."

Apart from Feingold, Democrats were unanimous that whatever Clinton's wrongs, they weren't impeachable offenses. "However reprehensible that conduct was, I do not believe it is constitutional grounds for removing from office a president elected by the people," North

Dr. Judy Cox puts a needle in the stomach 2 meridian of Scarlet, a teaching horse, Wednesday afternoon. Cox has been involved with animal acupuncture since October 1997, when she began training with the International Veterinary Acupuncture Society. Acupuncture redirects the body's energy along meridians where energy flows. Cox is the first K-State Vet Med doctor to have extensive training in acupuncture. She said one reason she decided to learn the art of acupuncture was because many of her clients in equine medicine were inquiring about it.

Animal Acupuncture

By AMANDA EWING
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A horse with partial face paralysis was brought to Dr. Judy Cox for help. Too much pressure on the side of its face caused damage that hadn't been fixed by drugs or rest.

Cox didn't give the horse an injection of a new cure-all medicine. Rather, she let very fine needles stick in the horse for 30 minutes over the course of five treatments.

The horse was cured of its paralysis through acupuncture, the Chinese art of healing with needles. Cox is the first doctor at the College of Veterinary Medicine to undergo the extensive training to become an animal acupuncturist.

The training by the International Veterinary Acupuncture Society involves four five-day sessions over the course of four months. It also involves passing a written and oral exam, completing 40 clock hours of participating in acupuncture with a licensed veterinarian and the submission of a case report. Cox only has to have her report approved.

Animal acupuncture has been used in China since 2000 B.C. but only has become popular in the United States over the past 50 years. The art of acupuncture is to redirect the body's energy so the energy field regains balance. The needles are placed along meridians where the energy flows.

Cox decided to learn about this process because more and more people were inquiring about it.

"Alternative medicine is becoming more widely used by veterinarians," Cox said. "There are a lot of owners of animals who are interested in it and that request its use or who want to know if it would help their particular animal."

Acupuncture is not a New Age treatment to take the place of conventional medicine, Cox said. It is used as a complementary treatment along with conventional therapy.

"In my opinion, it does not take the place of conventional medical therapy as we have been practicing it in the Western world," Cox said. "Its place is in circumstances where it's shown to be more effective than conventional medical therapy or in circumstances where there isn't a good conventional therapy or where conventional medical therapy has been tried and hasn't worked."

Animal acupuncture is used in two ways, Cox said. One way is to stimulate or tonify an animal, which gives it energy. The other way is to sedate or depress the animal, for pain relief.

The length of treatment varies depending on the animal. Cox said animals should go through three to six treatments, as many things are not helped by the first treatment. Some chronic conditions require treatment for the rest of the animal's life.

"Some things you treat and they go away," Cox said. "Treating chronic painful conditions, like arthritis, requires treatment from time to time or the pain will come back."

Cox said the acupuncture done at K-State will be used in research as a way to prove some of the uses with which veterinarians are reporting with. She also said it will be available for students who want to learn more about animal acupuncture.

Earl Gaughan, head of the equine section, said this new option is a good way to attract new clientele as well as discover answers to clinical questions.

"At an institution that has a role to ask as well as answer questions, we can gain a better understanding," Gaughan said. "It gives us a chance to offer something that's not been offered here before."

Cox said acupuncture will offer more treatment options, but it's not something that can be done without knowledge. Chinese medicine and acupuncture are complex sciences that require in-depth study.

"You can't properly do acupuncture unless you study the science of Chinese medicine, because you have to understand what you're trying to accomplish with the meridians and energy movement," Cox said. "It's not just a matter of sticking needles in here and there."

'Souper Bowl' gives Super Bowl fans chance to donate

This weekend, two goals are waiting to be met. One has to do with football, and the other has to do with soup.

The Super Bowl is this Sunday. "Souper Bowl Sunday," however, is a project that begins this week and will end on Sunday.

Both Manhattan Dillons locations will have drop-offs to collect donations for canned soup or any other food item.

"We ask people as they go in to shop, to pick up a couple cans of soup and donate," Riley County Attorney Bill Kennedy said.

Kathy Carpenter, office manager at Riley County Attorney's office, became interested after talking about the project with Kennedy. Carpenter helps coordinate distribution.

New plastic garbage cans from Refuse Control will be used to make picking up and dropping off easier. Cans are donated to the Flint Hills Breadbasket. Local schools and churches are also being used as drop-off points.

"If every person in Manhattan donated a can of soup that would be about 70,000 cans," Kennedy said. "That's a lot of soup."

Alumni Association hits personal best with awards

KSU Alumni Association staff won 13 Council for Advancement and Support of Education awards — the most in association history.

Amy Button Renz, Alumni Association president, accepted the awards at the CASE Annual District Six Conference on Jan. 19 in Kansas City, Mo.

"We have very creative individuals," Renz said. "Not only was the staff recognized for some visual design and photography but also for some of the stories and programs."

"It's really rewarding to see the staff recognized," she said.

The awards committee judged more than 600 entries from colleges and universities in an eight-state region. Renz said the staff decided which entries would be submitted.

"The staff does some brainstorming together and then just individually," she said. "I think they have a good feel for which programs are truly outstanding."

The K-Stater, the alumni magazine, won four awards. Two awards for recruitment events and three awards for special projects and brochures were included.

Renz said the four gold entries are eligible for consideration at the CASE National Assembly in July.

Committee considers change in seat belt law

TOPEKA — Drivers could be stopped and ticketed for not wearing a seat belt under legislation considered today by the Senate Transportation and Tourism Committee.

The law now says police officers can ticket a person for failing to wear a seat belt only when they are stopped for another violation such as speeding.

No action was taken on the bill. Among those supporting the bill was the Kansas Highway Patrol, which said that in 1997, 409 people were killed in traffic mishaps in the state, 257 of whom weren't wearing a seat belt.

Under the bill, failure to wear a seat belt would continue to carry a $10 fine, and such offenses wouldn't be reported to the Division of Motor Vehicles in the Department of Revenue or go on the violator's driving record.

The bill also would change the law to say that evidence of not wearing a seat belt could be admissible in court for determining any aspect of comparative negligence or mitigation of damages.

Secretary of Transportation Dean Carlson said changing the law could put Kansas in position to receive up to $528,000 in additional federal funds.

Fourteen states have made wearing a seat belt a primary law, meaning a person can be stopped for that reason alone.

Government to propose new, low-power radio

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Wilmer Urgelles wants to start a low-tech, low-cost radio station that would air Sunday services, Bible studies and Christian music in Spanish, what he says would be useful to the elderly population, who have trouble getting around.

"We are in such need of a station like this," said Urgelles of the Iglesia Cristiana El Buen Samaritano in Princeton, Fla.

More than 4,000 church and community members think so, too. They signed petitions in support of the radio station that were sent to the Federal Communications Commission.

The agency is expected today to take a first step to help churches, schools, city governments and community and interest groups get on the air, reversing two decades of policy opposing such licenses.

Commercial broadcasters remain leery of the idea.

The FCC will offer proposals to create new low-power FM radio stations across the country.

"This would bring radio back to the neighborhood," said Cheryl Leanza, an attorney with the Media Access Project, a public interest law firm. "It's a very low-technology, low-cost way to get your voice on the air."

Iraq criticizes Arab rulers for showing U.S. support

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Iraq accused Arab governments Wednesday of giving the United States the "green light" to step up its campaign against President Saddam Hussein's government.

In the latest show of official anger over lack of Arab support, Iraq's Parliament called on the people of Saudi Arabia and Kuwait to overthrow their rulers for supporting the U.S.-British airstrikes on Iraq last month.

The "Arab masses are called upon to stage a revolution against these agent regimes," a statement issued by the Parliament said at the end of a two-day debate.

A government statement said the United States was emboldened by the failure of Arab countries to criticize the attacks at their foreign ministers' meeting in Egypt on Sunday.

Unlikely suspects charged in California robberies

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. — She wore a Spice Girls T-shirt, her hair cut in a conservative bob. His sweater was clean and neat. Detectives thought the pair who allegedly committed two armed robberies weren't typical criminals.

But even they were surprised to learn the suspects were students at the University of California, Santa Cruz, and their alleged getaway driver an elementary school teaching aide.

Emma Rose Freeman, 18, a National Merit Scholar, is accused of pointing a .380-caliber Beretta semiautomatic handgun at a terrified stylist while robbing a hair salon on Jan. 16 with her boyfriend Anthony Louis Christophani, senior in philosophy.

Five days later when a security guard at a Costco warehouse store asked to see receipts for a boom box and stereo system, she allegedly turned to him with the gun and said: "Back off. Don't do anything stupid."

On Wednesday, it was Freeman who shook with fear as a judge warned that she could spend 25 years to life in prison.

Kansas farmer turns hobby into traveling art display

By JODY JOHNSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State is getting a preview today of an art exhibit that will begin touring Kansas on Friday.

The College of Agriculture and K-State Research and Extension are sponsoring the exhibit "Combine to Canvas: The Work of Gerald Moore." It will be open from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. today in Waters 137.

Moore, who is a farmer in Munden, Kan., will be traveling to small communities in Kansas with 17 of his paintings.

His paintings are vivid, colorful pictures of his life in Kansas including his family, friends and his farm.

"He paints what he sees around him," said Carol Peak, director of K-State's Community Service Program and of the Kansas Center for Rural Initiatives.

"Some of the paintings almost look like photographs."

Moore's tour will begin officially at 9 a.m. Friday at the Kansas Statehouse in Topeka.

He will visit more than 20 Kansas towns with his paintings.

Natasha Rodenberg, senior in graphic design and a member of the Community Service Program's team of students that organized Moore's tour, said his work is something to which everyone can relate.

"It applies to lots of people," Rodenberg said. "It's real life."

Moore began painting 12 years ago. "I've drawn practically all my life," he said. "I didn't know anything about painting."

When Moore became interested in painting, he took several classes at Cloud County Community College and learned to improve his painting style. Moore said he's inspired to paint because it brings in extra money.

About half of his paintings are requests from people wanting him to paint pictures for them.

The rest are paintings he does on his own.

"If I'm lucky, I'll get to sell those, too," he said.

Many of the paintings with which Moore is touring are sold already, he said.

Moore said it takes him about two to three months to finish one painting. "I work slow," he said.

The idea for his art tour began when an instructor at CCC talked with Don Lambert, a Topeka freelance writer, about Moore's work.

Lambert has promoted many Kansas artists.

"I went to look at Gerald's work and was quite impressed," Lambert said.

To promote Moore's artwork, Lambert got together with Peak and a team of students to organize an art tour.

"Don Lambert approached us last spring with this idea," Peak said. "We thought it was a really good way for students to work with the arts, and it's also good for the artist."

Moore said he's grateful to the people who have helped him create his tour.

"I couldn't have done it without them, that's for sure," Moore said. "I'm not much of a planner."

Rodenberg said it was important for the planning team to target small communities for the tour stops.

"We wanted to go to towns that don't get a lot of art exhibits," Rodenberg said.

She said because Moore is a small-town farmer, people of small towns will relate to him well, and the everyday life depictions of rural Kansas in his paintings are something residents of small towns will enjoy.

Peak said the communities are excited about being hosts to the art show.

"Small communities are very eager to have the art shows come to them," Peak said.

Moore's art will be displayed in libraries, banks and museums of the communities he will tour.

The paintings will remain in each community for two weeks to a month, depending on the arrangements made.

The tour will last about a year and a half.

Moore said he thinks his paintings will hit home for many of the small community members.

"When they see the paintings they can say, 'I've been there' or 'I've done that,'" Moore said.

Moore's art tour will take a break from late June to late July so Moore can get back to his farm to work.

"June and July are when we're busy with harvest," Moore said.

The tour will be at the Kansas State Fair in Hutchinson in September, and it will end in April 2000.

Moore said he would some day like to tour outside of Kansas.

"That'd be nice," he said.

"Hopefully people from other states will see this and will like to have this come to their community."

Moore encourages people to stop by the exhibit today.

"It'll put a smile on your face," he said. "There's something for everybody."

Journalists lobby for open trial

By JESSICA THOMAS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Society of Professional Journalists expressed outrage following the U.S. Senate vote Monday to adjourn into secret session for President Clinton's impeachment proceedings.

Wendy S. Myers, president of SPJ and editor of Veterinary Economics magazine in Lenexa, Kan., said the public should be upset over this matter.

"This is a bad political move for the senators," Myers said. "I think public sentiment will force them to open the proceedings back up. Several public citizen's groups are also demanding it."

Myers said she believes the senators made the decision to hide their views from the public.

"The public perception is that there is some deal-making going on," she said. "This is a highly charged event, and the senators are afraid they are going to get into trouble for their opinions, so they close it to the public."

Paul Parsons, professor of journalism and mass communications at K-State, said the Senate has the right to adjourn to secret session in this or any other case.

"The Senate creates its own rules, and it is allowed to go into closed session whenever it wants to," Parsons said. "There is no law that requires the Senate to meet in public all of the time. They usually meet in public because they choose to."

Parsons said there is no need to worry about the events the public can't see and that he believes the Senate has pure motives behind its decision.

"The impeachment is such a public event that nothing shady is going to happen behind closed doors," he said. "I think that maybe the Senate feels that without the cameras around, they will be able to speak to each other with more candor."

Douglass Daniel, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications and adviser of the K-State SPJ chapter, said he agrees with Myers that this event should be open to the public.

"Government always works better in the light of day," Daniel said. "I can understand the appeal of conducting public business out of the public's view. It's faster, easier on officials, and helps keep the heat off when the public is interested in an issue."

"But when it is a discussion of removing the President from office, I would think that's the last case in which the public business should be held in private."

Department's poor planning hurts team

There are certain things Division I athletes expect from a Division I school. A field, for example.

K-State will not live up to those expectations this year, however. The baseball team will have to wait until May before Frank Myers Field is ready to be played on.

That means the Wildcats will play the season with smaller crowds. It means they will be playing the season without home field advantage. The team will have its work cut out for it when it comes to recruiting.

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics must burden most of the blame for the foul-up. While the original plan for expanding Frank Myers Field was $800,000, the athletic department now projects that the expansion will cost $2.7 million. What's worse, ground has been broken for the stadium and money still hasn't been raised to cover its cost.

And when you add in the additional costs that will be incurred because of travel and use of other facilities, it should definitely send a message to the athletic department that it should look before it leaps.

Head coach Mike Clark has tried to make the best of the situation, saying, "If we can make it work, it will be the story of college baseball in 1999." The truth is, however, that the athletic department let both him and the team down. Not having a home field hurts the team's chances.

The best thing Wildcat fans can do to help is to go to the games, wherever they are, and support the baseball team.

OUR VIEW: an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. OUR VIEW is the Collegian's official opinion.

Pope's message of love and harmony ignores overpopulation problem

As I write this column, one of the more influential religious men this world has seen will be arriving at Missouri's Lambert Airport. Yes, Pope John Paul II is on tour again, wrapping up a standing-room only show in Mexico and off to his next venue in St. Louis, where no doubt he will bless the faithful, admonish us for our sins and leave us with some parting words of wisdom about peace, love and harmony.

What he is unlikely to do, if I am any judge of papal policy, is to discuss frankly with the Roman Catholic youth of the world the proper application of the latex condom.

World population passed the 5 billion mark back in 1987 — this year it will hit 6 billion, with a predicted increase of 75 million people a year. As any biologist will tell you, with so many humans on the planet, there are going to be some serious effects on both our ecosystem and our quality of life. While such resources as food and fuel can — and have — been increased through technology, there are finite limits. The more people there are, the more finely divided these resources become, and while the planet probably could squeeze in an extra 10 billion people, the quality of these people's lives would be barely above the subsistence level.

What separates overpopulation from other environmental concerns is that while the concept of human overpopulation is simple, the effects of overpopulation are complicated and not always obvious. As an example, overpopulation is generally thought of as a Third World problem not relevant to the U.S. and Europe. While it is true that the highest growth rates and the highest populations are found in Africa, Asia and Latin America, the amount of resources consumed by each individual is much greater in North America and Europe, a difference resulting from the near subsistence conditions of most of the developing world's inhabitants. The 2.5 million people this country adds each year consume resources equivalent to about 50 million people in developing nations.

Despite the desperate need to confront the problem of overpopulation, there is strong opposition to formulating an international, or even a national, plan to significantly reduce population growth to levels at or below replacement.

In the U.S., the opposition comes largely from economists who fear a collapse of the Social Security system. Workers contributing to Social Security provide revenue that enters the overall federal budget, out of which such entitlements as Social Security and Medicare are paid. As each generation enters retirement, it depends upon a larger population of younger workers to make these contributions to Social Security. Halting population growth reduces the number of workers and thus lowers the amount of federal funds available for entitlements. This becomes an economic problem when the monetary requirements of the retirees exceed the amount of money collected from Social Security.

What this creates is the ultimate Ponzi scheme, with each generation requiring a larger population of younger workers if it is to have any hope of adequate Social Security when it reaches retirement. However, to maintain the current ratio of workers to retirees at 4:1, the U.S. would have to increase immigration drastically, putting further pressure on our resources and creating an actuarial nightmare as each new cohort of workers approaches retirement. Better to accept the graying of America and confront the problem of population growth now, than pass off the inevitable collapse to a later generation.

In the Third World, it is religion that remains the main impediment to any discussion of population control, and yet it is in the Third World where some form of population regulation is most desperately needed. The Catholic Church has for some time held the dubious distinction of fermenting the strongest opposition to family planning and birth control in the Third World. The political influence of the Vatican, together with the widespread popularity of Catholicism within the many developing nations, has combined to scuttle both international conferences to discuss population problems and local efforts to promote family planning. The result of these actions has been the near doubling of the world's population during the past 40 years despite the availability of effective methods of contraception. With the majority of the world's children being born into poverty and destitution, John Paul's reinforcement of the Catholic Church's opposition to family planning is, to put it bluntly, and act of supreme irresponsibility.

Things could change, however. Between the time I write this column and the time you read it, the pope will have come and gone from the United States. He might have, in that time, reflected on crowded slums and rampant poverty of Mexico City, contrasted it with the affluence and open space of St. Louis and decided it was time for a new church policy on population. Even now, as I write this, he might be writing a new papal encyclical to be delivered at Wednesday's Mass discussing the various non-coercive methods of encouraging smaller families and what contraceptives would be most effective.

Quite frankly, I wouldn't bet on it.

I'm a recent K-State alum and have been in Manhattan for seven or eight years. I never really cared for DB92 or the music they played, but recently, since you did-over the new format, I must say I'm really impressed and enjoy listening to it. I hope you don't change back to the old.

I just wanted to voice my opinion on DB92's changeover. They're doing great. We got a lot of people who are listening to it now. Tell them not to change their format. We really like it.

I'm calling about the new format change on DB92. I just wanted to say I find it awful the way they've taken off Jam the Box. It's something that a lot of students listened to, as well as other people who live around the surrounding community. The biggest question I have is if this new format change is something that Jeremy Claeys likes or the students at K-State like. I haven't seen any surveys done that would tell me that this is the format change that the student body wanted. It looks more to me that Jeremy Claeys is playing the music Jeremy Claeys likes.

On Monday, on 91.9, I was listening to the radio and heard a talk show about professional wrestling. I think it is ridiculous that DB92 cuts good radio shows like the Gary News Ska hour in order to put mainstream programming on such as talk shows about wrestling. Bring back ska.

HARTMAN

Sometimes the general public is blatantly fooled into believing a premeditated hoax (i.e. the Piltdown skull, War of the Worlds), but more often, and certainly more dastardly, the general public is slowly brainwashed without even knowing it.

So is the situation with the public's perception of the sound quality of compact discs vs. the old, standby records.

The general public sees CDs and their digital recording as perfection. In other words, flawless. Records, on the other hand, have been thrown to the wayside, old relics from a less technically advanced (and therefore inferior) age.

Yet I am here to shine a guiding light. There is much more to this old vinyl than just its popping and skipping. Let us meander about its less obvious characteristics.

In terms of people who buy either CDs or records, it can be seen that they exude certain qualities. Yes, I am saying there are certain personalities which are predictors of what music mediums are purchased.

Imagine the CD-person (in this case, a man), who just finished installing a few 15" subs into his dorm loft. As the whir of the CD player fades away into the denouement of finding the first track to "It Came From Outer Bass," he prepares for the initial affirmation of bass he so desperately seeks.

A record person might be seen in the local thrift-store immediately after finding the perfect outfit for her sorority's "Psychedelic Sixties" party, when her eyes glaze over on discovering a badly lit side room, silently hoarding a trove of records.

Needless to say, she spends the next couple of hours aimlessly searching for "Johnny Cash's Greatest Hits, vol. 2." Our CD person has just crossed "Aleva" off her one-stop, shampoo-gloves-McDonalds-notebook-hair-pin-toaster Wal-Mart shopping spree, rescinding her pharmacy route for electronics and finally giving in to her underfinanced feelings persuading her that Faith Hill's latest CD, which contains more medicinal value than a bottle of over-the-counter naproxen sodium. The record person would be relaxing at a friend's house one Friday night and, after finally getting the pipe lit, his energy converges on the record player's vertical tone-arm sensitivity. Afterwards, the lazy smoke wafts, a benign callous of their anticipation, and as the needle drops on his analog-mastered 180-gram virgin vinyl "Dark Side of the Moon" record, they sit, two cryonic pods awaiting an analog heartbeat...

What we have here are the record advocates being somewhat anal, precise, vintage-seekers and in search of a halfway-religious experience.

The CD camp, on the other hand, offers enlightenment through technologically-oriented music production. It gives one a reliability and security that is unavailable in traditional methods.

This brings us back to the issue at hand: CDs have a reputation for perfection, while records are seen as mistakes.

The record is not a pretty sight, to be sure. It must be kept safe, cleaned, maintained, and its vulnerability always respected.

CDs are simple. They are children of the "plug-and-play" concept, and aside from massive amounts of radiation, they are virtually indestructible.

Yet this simplicity of the CD system has chided its musical sensitivity. While records take brain-power to maintain, they pay themselves back with a slightly higher form of musical precision.

Records have a "feel" to them which, in being difficult to define, alienates people, pushing them to CD music.

CD music sounds just as fine as records, but its 44.1kHz sampling rate and error-correction give CDs an obvious feeling: music being measured by decibels, and not precision.

The analog record should be seen as music which is not inferior to CDs but superior. The public's opinion, though, shouldn't mistake the convenience of CDs as quality.

Pro-life supporters should not be generalized as one group

Editor,

In response to Tom Clarke's column, I really get tired of having pro-life people portrayed only as being right wing and religious. Pro-life people come from various groups in society. I am pro-life, and I am not a member of a right-wing religious sect at all.

As a woman, I find being able to have an abortion neither freeing nor liberating. Women have fought and continue to fight being stereotyped as the "weaker sex." We fight to be paid equal wages for equal work. We fight to be recognized as intellectual equals to our male counterparts. We fight to make clear one and for all that "no" does indeed mean "no." The list goes on and on. How can we then turn around and, through abortion, destroy those who are the weakest? How can we then destroy those who are ours to protect?

A popular pro-choice thing to say is "a woman should have the right to do what she wants to her own body." I submit, though, that a fetus inside a womb is not an appendage of that woman's body. That fetus is someone else's body. Therefore, I do not see where we as women, we as a society, or those in the U.S. Supreme Court have any right to say it is OK to destroy that.

It also was stated in Clarke's column that women should be able to make their own reproductive decisions. I agree. Women have it in their power to prevent pregnancy before it even happens. There are various contraceptives available, and, when used properly, they effectively prevent not only pregnancy but also disease.

Colleges recruit women for engineering, science

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Women interested in pursuing a career in engineering or science now have another outlet at K-State.

A new program developed jointly by the College of Engineering and the College of Arts and Sciences will focus on the recruitment and retention of women in these fields.

The Women in Engineering and Science Program is designed to cultivate an interest in science in young women. About 14 percent of the students now enrolled in the engineering college at K-State are women. Nationwide, women make up about 18 to 20 percent of engineering majors. Rich Gallagher, associate dean of engineering, attributes this gap to how women are raised.

"Women are discouraged to pursue these kinds of careers at an early age," Gallagher said. "There are no real pre-engineering classes in high school. If they don't take the classes they won't know anything about this rewarding field."

Gallagher said he sees several benefits to more women entering the fields of engineering and science.

"We need more women in these classrooms," he said. "It would improve the diversity. It would add a whole new element to the college."

A committee of faculty and students from the two colleges is searching for a director for the program. Shelli Starrett, member of the Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering, is the chairwoman of the committee.

"The first step for this program is to find a director," Starrett said. "He or she will have quite a bit of freedom in deciding how the program will recruit, starting with middle schoolers. Obviously we need a very creative person for this job."

The program needs a director with a sense of vision and direction, Gallagher said.

"If we start recruiting at the middle school age now, we won't know if our efforts worked until that group begins college and declare their majors," he said. "So, we need someone who can make a long-term commitment and work very hard without seeing any immediate results."

The committee hopes to find a director by June 1.

There are many opportunities available for women in engineering, Starrett said.

"I think it's a good time to be a woman in engineering. There are so many opportunities right now," she said. "A woman can do so much as an engineer. She can solve problems and affect technology. She can affect the future."

Albright asks Saudis' help against Iraq

By BARRY SCHWEID
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — Secretary of State Madeleine Albright sought Saudi Arabia's support Wednesday for U.S. efforts to topple Iraqi President Saddam Hussein by assisting opposition groups.

Albright's spokesman candidly acknowledged the secretary's intention to try to enlist the backing of this conservative monarchy in a growing U.S. campaign to oust Hussein.

The plea for Saudi support follows a U.S. decision to provide selective opposition groups in Iraq with some $97 million in surplus U.S. military equipment.

Administration officials long have claimed the Saudis quietly supported the joint U.S.-British bombings of Iraq in a dispute over U.N. weapons inspections.

The Saudis have been discreet while also registering anxiety about the plight of Iraqi people under Hussein's rule and under U.N. economic sanctions.

Albright also defended the right of U.S. and British pilots to protect themselves while patrolling the "no-fly" zones over Iraq.

"There have been 70 violations of the no-fly zones by the Iraqi regime and 20 hits or attempts to hit our pilots," Albright said.

"We regret the stray missile in Basra that killed some civilians, but we believe that it is essential for the no-fly zones to be protected and for our pilots to be able to defend themselves when they are attacked," she said.

The Pentagon acknowledged

Tuesday that a U.S. missile missed its target Monday during strikes near the southern Iraqi city of Basra. Iraqi officials said that errant U.S. missiles killed at least 11 people and injured 59 in and around the city.

MU's Dooling sets career high

■ Freshman scores 19 points in first start.

By MIKE VIETTI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Freshman guard Keyon Dooling came to Mizzou as a highly touted Parade All-American expected to play a significant amount of time in his first year. Yet until the Tigers' 70-63 victory over K-State on Wednesday, Dooling had never earned his first start.

He's sure to get many more now.

Dooling crushed the Cats' hopes of a comeback against Missouri when he made a spectacular spin move to avoid a steal by junior guard Cortez Groves, turned immediately and exploded to see us play a game not up to the level we can play.

three-point shot, boosting his career high to 19 points.

"I don't know what to say about it," Dooling said. "It was just one of those nights when everything goes in."

MU head coach Norm Stewart gave Dooling the nod after his impressive 15-point game in the Tigers' upset over KU on Sunday.

"I think he's playing very well, and after last game he earned his stripes," Stewart said.

Dooling set his previous career high of 16 points earlier this season when the Tigers defeated the Cats in Manhattan.

Groves had the unenviable task of attempting to stop Dooling.

"He's really good, he can drive and he shot the three today," Groves said.

"There was one play I remember when I was off him by a lot, but he drove hard and still got around me," Groves said.

For most of this season, the "potential" label has been stamped on Dooling's head after so much was expected of him, but he refused to let it disturb him and is now beginning to thrive.

"I've been working hard and I've matured a lot," Dooling said. "In the college game, nothing is given to you. You have to earn everything."

Remaining in the spotlight would be a bonus, but Dooling's biggest concern is about how well his team finishes out the season.

"Our main concern is the Big 12 Championship," Dooling said. "I've just got to go out there and do whatever my part is."

no REVENGE

Poor shooting dooms Wildcats in this year's second loss to Missouri

By FRANK FLATON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Revenge was on the fingertips of the K-State men's basketball players against the Missouri Tigers Wednesday night. Revenge for the Cats' Jan. 6 defeat against the Tigers 78-73, however, was not in the stars.

K-State shot a dismal 38 percent from the floor as the Tigers mauled the Wildcats 70-63 at the Hearn Center in Columbia.

"This game was a typical non-conference game," head coach Tom Asbury said. "It's a war. We had to make plays and they were the ones that made plays down the stretch."

The Wildcats continue their conference road woes, losing their fifth straight Big 12 conference road outing. They go to 1-18 all-time in conference away games.

K-State, which was riding a two game winning streak in Big 12 play, moves to 14-7 overall and 3-5 in the Big 12 on the season.

Missouri improves to 13-4 overall and 4-2 in conference on the year after upsetting 19th-ranked Kansas, 71-63, on Sunday. The Tigers have been commanding at the Hearn Center, where they have lost only two games this season.

"This was a good win for us," Missouri head coach Norm Stewart said. "We beat a team we have beaten before, and I think they played really well. We put on some good pressure, and the defense really got some things done."

Turnovers continue to plague the Wildcats as the Tigers forced K-State to cough up 14. Through their first 20 games, the Cats have averaged nearly 18 turnovers a game.

"We turned the ball over too many times," Asbury said. "We just need to slow down and take good shots the whole time. We played OK defensively, but we've got to slow down and execute."

Pacing the Wildcats was junior guard Cortez Groves, who tied a career-high 21 points. Groves and senior forward Manny Dies, who tossed in 10 points, were the only players in double figures for the Wildcats.

"Cortez played very well," Asbury said. "I feel that he did a nice job. He's learning to penetrate. But somebody else has got to step up. We are not a one-man team."

Freshman star Keyon Dooling lead the Tigers with 19 points and junior forward Albert White chipped in 15.

Center, Monte Hardge had only five points and six rebounds for the Tigers, but junior forward Tony Kitt said he was a big force in the middle for Missouri.

"He's big," Kitt said. "He takes up a lot of space and uses his size to his advantage. But we can't use that as an excuse. It was hard. Too bad we couldn't come out with a win."

From the opening tip-off, the first half stayed close as the Cats drew first blood when Dies tossed in a two-pointer and two foul shots with just under two minutes in. It was the only time the Cats would lead in the opening half, as Dooling answered to put the Tigers up 4-3 with a high-flying slam dunk.

Missouri led until Kitt tossed in a Groves miss with 7:31 left to go, to notch the game at 23. The Tigers wouldn't let go of the lead, though, as they stretched the margin to as many as seven. Groves tossed in a jumper with just under 30 seconds to go, to end the half at 37-34.

The Wildcats grabbed a one-point lead in the second half as senior guard

Aggies crush Wildcats at home

By NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Texas A&M got off to an early 10-point lead Wednesday night against the Wildcats in Bramlage Coliseum.

K-State never recovered. It was a game in which K-State coaches and players agreed the team came out lacking intensity, and never found it.

"We played poorly from the initial tip to the final buzzer," K-State coach Deb Patterson said. "It is tough to see us play a game not up to the level we can play."

The Cats entered the game 4-3 in conference play, looking to win at home against the 1-5 Aggies.

The first half started with an Aggies 10-point run before Olga Firsova came off the Cats' bench to score the team's first basket of the game. Firsova led K-State in scoring with 17 points in the game.

"Olga played well and she took good, strong shots," center Angie Finkes said. "She tried to give us a spark off the bench."

Patterson said she was pleased with Firsova's offensive play.

"Olga, I thought, played with a lot of intensity on the offensive end," she said.

Firsova and forward Nicky Ramage scored 21 of the team's 29 points in the first half.

In the first half, the Cats shot 48 percent from the field, and were just 20 percent from three-point range.

Texas A&M coach Peggie Gillom said it was important for her team not to let up after they had established a lead at the half.

"In a couple of other games this season we've had leads like that and let up," Gillom said. "Tonight we did not let up."

In the second half K-State missed its first seven shots, and the Aggies began to open up a lead as Prissy Sharpe broke into the 1,000-point club, scoring 21 points in the game.

The Aggies had 3 players score in double figures and shot 54 percent from the field.

Patterson said she was disappointed with her team's second half defensive effort.

"When you're behind in the ball game you've got to make defensive stops," Patterson said.

Patterson said it wasn't the loss that bothered her, but the sluggishness with which her team played.

"It's not that we lost, it's the manner in which we competed," Patterson said.

Gillom was pleased to get the win on the road.

"I think they had an off night, but I'm not taking anything away from us," Gillom said.

K-State's next game is Sunday in Lawrence against KU and Patterson expects her team to bounce back.

"After a game like tonight, you have to hope the team is hungry," Patterson said.

K-State center Olga Firsova fights for a rebound with Texas A&M forward Prissy Sharpe Wednesday evening at Bramlage Coliseum. The Aggies defeated the Wildcats 73-59.

How do you study wrestling fans? As with animals, observe their habitat

Once every thousand years, or so the legend says, a young, strong, intelligent champion is handed a quest directly from the graces of The Almighty One Himself.

That time is now. That person is me, if we take out the strong, intelligent and champion parts.

And the quest of all quests is to understand why the most intelligent forms of life on Earth spend precious time each week watching professional wrestling.

With my God-given quest in mind, I set out to determine exactly what would be the best way to understand the mass appeal of this preposterous sport.

When zoologists want to study a specific animal they examine it in its own habitat. When anthropologists attempt to learn about another culture, they do it from that culture's standpoint.

Those things said, I decided that I needed to watch the sport in a typical pro-wrestling environment. So, I went over to a friend's house two Sundays ago to watch WWF Raw Is War. I then returned last Sunday to buy my share of the pay-per-view WWF Royal Rumble. I assure the loyal pro-wrestling fans that my friends are true worshippers of this stuff. They were able to tell me the complete origin of every wrestler and who he or she had beefs with. Here's what happened that helped me to my conclusion:

Sunday 17th

WWF Raw opens with the annoying announcer Jerry Lawler screaming, "Stone Cold has no chance in hell of winning the Royal Rumble."

After hearing that, I knew I wasn't watching Masterpiece Theater on PBS, but I thought it was a fitting way for my entrance into the realm of pro wrestling.

Later on in the show, a man by the name of Road Dogg wrestled a character named Gangrel. Road Dogg is a member of DX, which stands for degeneration X. Road Dogg said, "If you ain't down with DX... suck it!" Gangrel is not a normal fellow either. He supposedly drinks blood before each match and sports vampire teeth which he occasionally will use during the course of the match.

The match between these two clowns doesn't last long, because mysteriously there are three long, seemingly normal tables located underneath the ring, which Road Dogg used to his advantage to defeat Gangrel.

The most fascinating character in the WWF is definitely the thing called Mankind. It is outfitted in an overly large, button-down shirt with a neck tie, as well as typical wrestling pants and boots. Whoops, I forgot to mention he has a Hannibal Lector mask on his face, but that's not even the best part.

After he has his opponent pretty well finished, he takes a sock out of his pants, affectionately named "Socko," then puts Socko on his hand, and rams Socko down his opponent's throat. For some reason, the wrestlers seem to forget that Socko is still just a hand and that biting it would be a possible counter-move.

The best part of this Sunday occurred when female wrestler Chyna (she's more buff on strength than intelligence) played a video depicting male wrestler Sexual Chocolate being orally pleased by a man dressed as a woman. Conveniently, Sexual Chocolate's mom was in the audience to see her son while the video was played.

Sunday 24th

The first four fights were eventful, but nothing compared to the last two. In the fifth match, Mankind wrestled The Rock for the WWF title in a contest that lasted about 25 minutes.

I have always maintained that pro wrestling is absolutely fake, until now. The Rock smashed Mankind over the head with a metal chair over a dozen times, and he was actually hitting him. After the culmination of that punishment, the chair was bent out of shape because of the beating Mankind took.

The Royal Rumble was saved for the end and lasted almost until the end of the world, or about 45 minutes. Of course Stone Cold Steve Austin and WWF owner Vince McMahon were the first two entrants into the ring, due to their fierce hatred for one another. To make a long story short, it looked like McMahon was going to win, then it looked like Austin would be the victor, then McMahon won.

If I had typed out the entire Royal Rumble, that is, what happened while other guys were fighting in the ring as well as what was going on outside of the ring, it would have taken me forever.

That's basically what I have concluded about professional wrestling: It's a long, drawn-out fantasy soap opera where men can watch what they like best: violence. I still think chopping out the absolute absurdities of pro wrestling would be beneficial, but I could say the same thing about Days of Our Lives, too.

Film's detail 'worth the work'

By CORBIN H. CRABLE

If for some reason you don't get a chance to get out and see the new psychological thriller "In Dreams," you might lose sleep over it.

Director Neil Jordan paints a picture of Claire Cooper (Annette Bening), a small town woman who has been plagued her entire life with eerie dreams, both in and out of sleep. In actuality, she is recalling someone else's memories, and that "someone" is out to destroy her sanity for his own personal benefit.

From the start, Bening's character is portrayed as a woman grasping at straws in an attempt to save what little emotional stability she has left. When she loses her daughter Rebecca (Katie Sagona), Claire's dreams come back to haunt her with a vengeance.

With the assistance of a psychologist (Stephen Rea) and a police detective (Paul Guilfoyle), the mystery begins to be revealed: A psychopath, Vivian Thompson (Robert Downey Jr.), is living memories through Claire — memories from his traumatic early childhood, during which he was orphaned and placed in a mental hospital.

Incidentally, Claire, through the course of the movie, is admitted to that same mental hospital and even stays in the same room in which Vivian slept nearly 30 years ago. What transpires is a battle between a woman who wishes to cast away these memories and a madman who wishes for a "normal" life, complete with a child and parents, of which he was deprived.

In Bening's case, casting her in the role of Claire was an obvious waste of talent. With her track record, Bening can do much better than portraying a two-dimensional character for whom the viewer has no real concern whether she maintains her sanity or goes nuts. Claire has no real depth; from the beginning of the movie, she is emotionally disturbed, and her insanity reveals itself swiftly.

Perhaps if her emotional breakdown had been gradual, viewers might actually care about her situation. As shallow as Claire is, Bening did well with what little she had to work with.

Robert Downey Jr., however, was so appropriately cast it's haunting. Most viewers and, undoubtedly, critics, won't be able to watch his character without making some reference to his recent drug and emotional problems.

One might think the dream sequences, which appear scattered throughout the movie, become redundant after a while. However, Jordan adds a bit of variety into every flashback, ensuring that the viewer will spot new details in each sequence — making the dream scenes, mostly set underwater or in an apple orchard, like pieces of a puzzle.

Like a puzzle, this movie will provoke thought and require the viewer to pay attention to detail, but will be worth the work in the end.

Symbolic communication helps deal with stress, depression

By KRISTEN DYMACEK
Kansas State Collegian

Ways of coping with stress, dealing with depression and maintaining good health are becoming more and more popular and necessary to function in today's busy society.

Many people are turning to different types of therapy as a healing method to help improve their mental and physical well-being.

Art therapy is one method people are turning to for help.

"I think of art therapy as the use of drawing and helping a person understand internal thoughts and emotions," said John Robertson, psychologist at University Counseling Services.

Robertson said words are not the only way of expressing feelings. Art therapy allows a person to draw a picture if they are having problems relating an idea or thought. Instead of verbally communicating, a person can create symbols to explain and understand their emotions.

Renata Replogle, assistant professor of art and head of the Department of Pre-Art Therapy, said art therapy is not a new idea. It was first used in the late 1800s on mentally ill patients in Europe. She said its popularity has grown significantly since then.

"Art has always had a healing effect," Replogle said. "It's always been a good way for people to express themselves."

She said art therapy is not just used for individuals with crises. It is used as a preventative therapy, a way to maintain good health.

"Art therapy is using the ability to be creative and understanding and let art speak for us," Replogle said.

Art isn't always used as the only means of therapy, she said. The performing arts also can be used.

"It's not uncommon for art therapy to work along with other therapies such as movement therapy, music therapy or drama therapy," Replogle said. "They share many of the same kind of goals and processes as art therapy."

Art therapy is still a relatively new field in terms of professions, so she said there is a lot of growing and learning that is still being done.

Another therapy growing in popularity in the past few years for dealing with stress and tension is aromatherapy.

"Aromatherapy is the use of different oils in products to give a different physical and emotional attitude and well-being," said Sharon Hoopes, Bath and Body Works store manager.

She said aromatherapy mostly involves the inhaling of aromas and some absorption of those oils through the skin.

The oils come from flowers and plants, which help the brain relieve stress and tension.

Hoopes said the most popular fragrances are lavender and eucalyptus.

"Lavender is soothing and is good for easing tension and falling asleep. Eucalyptus is a good stress reliever and is good for colds," Hoopes said.

She said a good example of how eucalyptus works can be seen in the koala bear which spends all day eating eucalyptus leaves and is a docile animal. The same effect is wanted when the eucalyptus is used in aromatherapy.

Aromatherapy lines are growing to suit people's needs.

Hoopes said there are several different products like candles, lotion, shower gel, soap and bath salts because of the increase in demand.

Angeline Benson, sophomore in business administration, said she started using aromatherapy candles and shower gel when she saw a new product line for stress relief, and she's used it ever since.

"It's relaxing and smells nice. It's not flowery but smells really fresh," Benson said. "It really helps relieve stress."

Hoopes said everyone can benefit from aromatherapy, whether it's helping with headaches, tension, stress or sleeplessness.

"Aromatherapy is a great way to get psychological, physical and mental help by using simple methods," she said.

'Swan Lake' kicks off events in spring McCain Auditorium series

By KELLY LYNN
Kansas State Collegian

A performance of Swan Lake by the Russian National Ballet will kick off the McCain Performance Series for the semester. The ballet will be performed at McCain Auditorium at 7:30 tonight.

Joyce Yagerline, assistant professor of dance, said the ballet's popularity will draw crowds.

"Swan Lake has been called the most popular classical ballet," Yagerline said. "This is really exciting because the last ballet company to come to K-State was three years ago with the Colorado Ballet Company."

The Russian National Ballet's visit to K-State is part of its first tour to North America.

Swan Lake is a four-act ballet. The classic tale involves a prince who comes upon a group of maidens who have been transformed into swans by an evil sorcerer. The prince is captivated by one of the most beautiful swan maidens, Odette. Wishing to free her from captivity, he confesses his love to Odette but is fooled by the evil sorcerer who has disguised Odette as a black swan, Odile.

Ultimately, Yagerline said, "Swan Lake" is a love story.

"Everyone loves its story of ideal love," Yagerline said.

Various endings to the ballet exist. In some versions, the prince's love for Odette overcomes the evil sorcerer, while other versions portray the prince and Odette throwing themselves into the lake, committing suicide together.

"What is popular about this ballet is that the same ballerina plays both roles — the white swan, Odette, and the black swan, Odile. It's not only technical demands of the role but the interpretation of both roles as well," Yagerline said.

The same ballerina who must dance tender and delicately as the white swan, must also execute the more hard-edged, calculating role as the black swan, Yagerline said.

The original production of Swan Lake was choreographed by Marius Petipa and Lev Ivanov, and Yuri Grigorovich choreographed the dances at the ball in the third act. It was first performed at the Maryinsky Theater in St. Petersburg, Russia, in 1895.

"I think there is something about Russians doing a work like this that makes it magical," Richard Martin, director of McCain, said. "I am certain theirs is going to be an interpretation that is close to what Petipa and Lev Ivanov did."

Manhattan legislator introduces abortion bill

■ State Senate to consider mothers' mental health, fetus viability.

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With her introduction of a bill Tuesday morning, Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, proved Roe vs. Wade has far from ended the debate over abortion in Kansas.

Although the Supreme Court ruling 26 years ago set the precedent preventing state or federal government from regulating abortions in the first six months of pregnancy, bills introduced to the Kansas Legislature this month conflict on where the legal line is drawn on legal late-term abortions.

Oleen said she hoped the federal and state affairs bill introduced to the state Senate would clarify 1998 changes to the Kansas abortion laws.

Under the proposed bill, a viable fetus found to be more than 22 weeks into gestation still may be aborted legally if the pregnancy poses a threat to the life or the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman or if the fetus is affected by a severe or life-threatening deformity or abnormality.

"Viable" refers to a fetus able to live outside the uterus indefinitely without "extraordinary medical means." If found to be viable, two physicians with no financial or legal link must agree that one of the above conditions exists before an abortion can take place.

Although the bill has not changed the viability definition, Oleen said clauses in the current state law drop and add mental health as a consideration throughout.

"My goal is to clearly delineate the law so it is clearly understood. This would make it very clear that mental health as a consideration for these physicians," she said.

The deformity or abnormality clause also has been retained after hearing testimonials from parents in such scenarios, she said. The idea is basically to keep the abortion decision in the hands of women, their families, doctors and clergy instead of the state, Oleen said.

Laura Ziegler, senior in general human ecology and former president of Students for the Right to Life, said she thinks the bill allows too much.

Children can be born at 22 weeks gestation, and the percentage of women whose lives are endangered by a pregnancy is smaller than most people think, she said.

Ziegler also said she thought the mental-impairment clause is too general and broad.

Using an excuse of depression or other illnesses could be enough to end the pregnancy, she said.

"I think that's a big loophole she's trying to add," Ziegler said.

She also said she thought the deformity or abnormality clause was a "cop out."

Another bill introduced to the house Jan. 11, however, would provide fewer options for late-term abortion. If passed, House Bill No. 2007 would eliminate the mental impairment as well as the abnormality or deformity clauses and revise the "viability" definition to a fetus that can survive indefinitely outside the womb with "natural or life supportive measures."

This would leave only a threat to the pregnant woman's life or likelihood of permanent physical damage as grounds for a legal abortion of a viable fetus more than 22 weeks in gestation.

John Fliter, assistant professor of political science, said he thought many conservatives would see the mental-impairment clause as a loophole. Conservative interests eliminated some of those clauses but not all in the 1998 session, leading to an inconsistent law, he said.

"It's been confusing because they changed it at the last minute last year," he said.

Personally, Fliter said he wants the decisions of late-term abortions left to the doctor and the patient.

"I don't want government micro-managing these decisions," he said.

Chaos reigns in Colombia after two quakes

By FRANK BAJAK
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ARMENIA, Colombia — After a night of heavy rains slowed the search for earthquake victims and worsened the suffering of survivors, relief efforts resumed under gray skies Wednesday amid reports of coffin shortages and looting.

Hungry residents of this devastated city broke down the gates of a downtown supermarket and stole rice, cooking oil, flour and rum. Debris began falling from the upper reaches of the damaged four-story building housing the store, sending the panicked looters to flee into the street.

A similar scene occurred at a grocery store a block away.

The government, meanwhile, denounced profiteering of caskets and pledged coffins to any families that need them.

"We don't have enough coffins to bury the dead," Quindio state Gov. Henry Gomez said.

Relief workers wrapped bodies in black plastic or blankets and left them on the streets two days after one of Colombia's worst earthquakes.

At least 700 people are confirmed dead from the magnitude 6 quake in western Colombia; officials said the final toll surely will rise. Red Cross officials said 500 bodies have been recovered in this provincial capital alone and that many outlying towns have yet to be heard from.

Captain Ciro Antonio Guiza, Armenia's deputy fire chief, said Tuesday that he believed more than 1,000 had perished, a number that Red Cross Coordinator Carlos Giraldo agreed with.

Also Wednesday, a 5.4 magnitude earthquake shook northeastern Colombia. It was felt in Bucaramanga, the main city in eastern Colombia, but no casualties or damages were reported immediately.

The quake was centered near the town of Los Santos, 150 miles northeast of Bogotá, the National Seismological Network said.

The Monday afternoon earthquake devastated cities and towns across Colombia's agriculturally rich coffee belt, where the world's largest amount of the gourmet-quality arabica beans favored by Americans are grown.

Damage to the coffee crop, which makes up 48 percent of the country's production, was not expected to be severe.

Colombia is the world's second-largest grower after Brazil, with $2.15 billion in exports.

The tremor shook buildings as far away as Bogotá, 140 miles from the epicenter. In the capital on Wednesday, boy scouts and civil defense workers picked through donated medicine, clothes, water and food — packaging the best of it in boxes and garbage bags to be shuttled to the disaster zone.

Officials urged citizens to give money, not goods, and complained that some were donating expired medicine.

As darkness fell Tuesday in Armenia, a city of 300,000 residents, the slow task of recovery was hindered by a downpour.

Armenia received the brunt of the quake's fury. Officials appealed for refrigerated trucks and generators for hospitals to keep bodies from decomposing and a possible epidemic at bay.

Schools and stadiums were turned into makeshift shelters, but there wasn't enough space to house the estimated 180,000 people left homeless.

Food and drinking water also were in dangerously short supply.

At least three people were found alive under the rubble today, including 65-year-old Jorge Lieser Gomez, who told reporters after his rescue, "I thank God because I am alive, and that my family is all right."

The pained voices of two children were heard under the debris late Tuesday, but by this morning rescue teams had failed to dig them out.

"Unfortunately, the voices went quiet during the night, but we are still searching, with the hope of rescuing them alive," said Cesar Augusto Giraldo, a Civil Defense rescue worker.

At Red Cross headquarters in Armenia, a volunteer tried to calm a grumbling, frustrated line of aid seekers, assuring them that assistance was coming. But the rain forced a halt to distribution of goods from a warehouse across the muddy street.
